The space carves 80 dining-room seats, 18 bar seats and an open kitchen out of a former doggy day care. It boasts oodles of French Quarter speakeasy ambiance, with its towering ceiling, exposed rafters, wildly colored street-art paintings, neon nudie-club sign, burlesque posters, bordello-wallpaper stenciling, crystal chandeliers and dangling Edison bulbs. Three projection TVs quietly display sports and ancient MTV music videos over a hilarious, occasionally painfully loud '80s and early-'90s soundtrack—it's been a while since I heard E.U.'s "Da Butt." Service in the bar and dining room amiably and casually hits its marks amid the dimly lit din. Against this atmospheric backdrop, Bootleg Special deals enough deliciousness to justify its comparatively pricey take on an originally bare-bones concept. How much you enjoy its hands-on slurpfest partly depends on your level of fastidiousness at the table: It's best to leave your fawn suede jacket at home. And given the size of the house specialty and many plates here, you'll want to bring friends. ◆

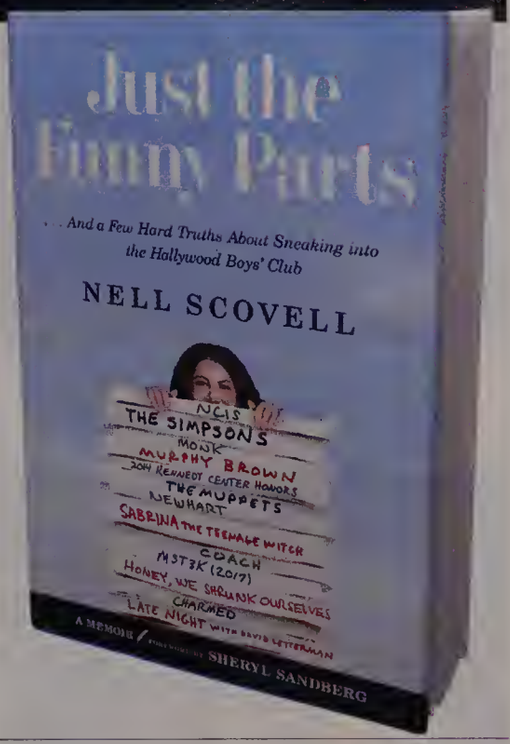
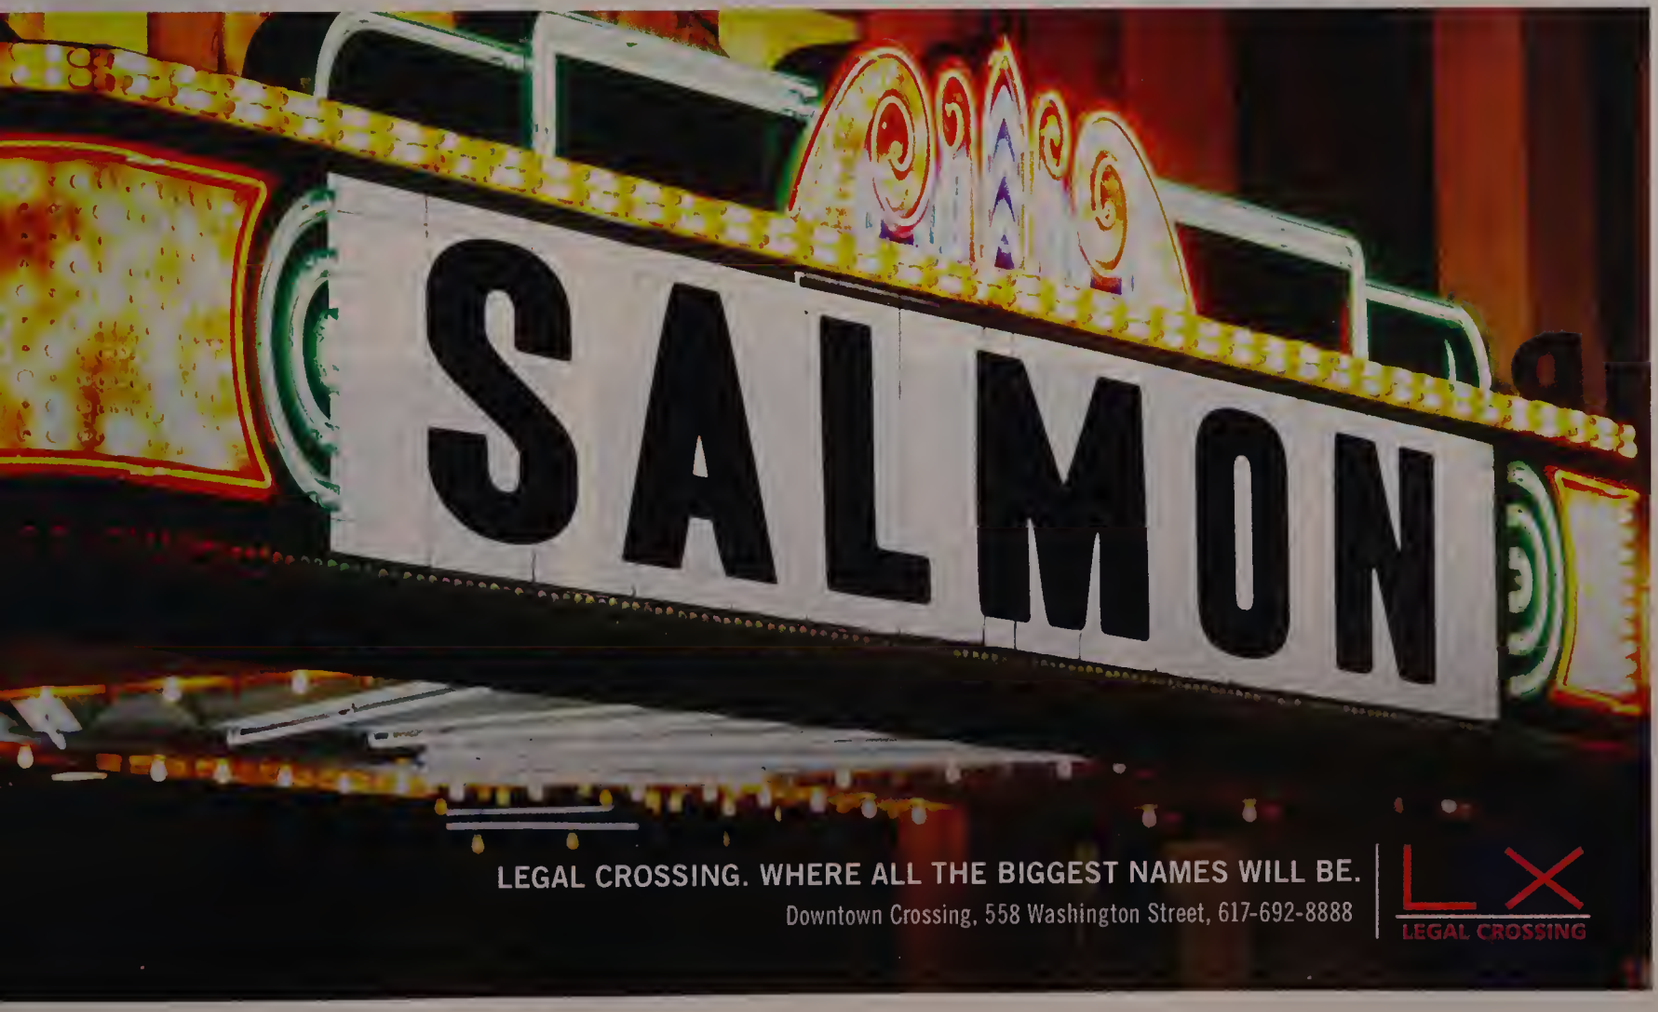
LAUGH & LEAN

A COMEDY WRITER SKETCHES OUT HER SUCCESSFUL CAREER



Just the Funny Parts
Published by Dey Street Books, 316 pages, $28



NELL SCOVELL WORKED NEARLY A million Hollywood jobs, directing, producing and writing TV shows, which the Newton native recounts in her new memoir, Just the Funny Parts. The shows include her creation Sabrina the Teenage Witch as well as The Bob Newhart Show, NCIS, Murphy Brown and The Muppets. Oh, and she put some mischievous words in the mouth of President Obama at the White House Correspondents' dinner.

An outlier in a man's world, Scovell has stormed into exciting venues, and readers get that sparkly flavor throughout her irreverent writing. While writers on The Simpsons work together on a storyline about Homer's alleged upcoming death, Scovell takes us backstage through the scene's many mini-iterations. Clearly, comedy writing has the same trudging deliberations as any group effort, but it's fun to see the many suggestions traveling toward a laugh.

However, Scovell's time working for Late Night With David Letterman brings a darker story. The host was oddly remote from the writers who dropped their wit on him from the heavens. And female interns got his attention, sparking some early #MeToo indiscretions of which he later confessed. An article Scovell later wrote criticizing Letterman in Vanity Fair brings her notoriety. This shifts the book's tone, and she eventually describes writing Lean In with Sheryl Sandberg. Scovell, bothered by her male-dominated world, ultimately pushes for more women in comedy writing. This memoir is her latest plea—blending her sharp wit with a social conscience.

FROM PAGE 296: Rejection and failure are the bread and butter of this gluten-free, nondairy town. Over a decade ago, I bumped into a talented comedy writer who had recently turned forty. Work was not coming as easily, and his agent was no longer responding quickly to his calls. My friend was shifting into the "Get me a younger, cheaper" phase of his career. I was struggling too. We commiserated. "I need a new paradigm for success," he sighed. ◆

A STITCH IN TIME

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ The New England chapter of the Susan G. Komen Foundation stepped out in style on March 9 for its Catwalk for the Cure benefit. Held in the Seaport District's Innovation and Design Building in partnership with 33 Munroe, the event included a silent auction and fashion show featuring 10 cancer survivors, seven professional models and two celebrities showcasing clothing from six local designers. The evening's 250 guests raised more than $20,000.

➜ On March 10, WGBH set the stage at its Brighton studios for A Masquerade Inspired by Masterpiece's Victoria, Season 2. Two hundred guests took a cue from the long-running biography of Queen Victoria, donning their best hoop skirts and frock coats for an evening of dancing led by Commonwealth Vintage Dancers, lectures on Victorian culture, series-inspired bites and a costume contest. The event raised $15,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I DON'T WANT TO APPEAR IGNORANT, BUT WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BOTOX AND FILLERS?

A: That is a very common question, and can be confusing to the uninitiated! They are very different , but they are both used to reduce lines and wrinkles on the face. Botox is typically used around the eyes and on the forehead, and fillers are used in the mid and lower face. Why is this?

The lines on the upper part of our face are caused by clenched muscles from years of squinting, frowning, raising our eyebrows, etc. Over time the muscles do not fully relax back into place. When Botox is injected into those muscles, it allows the muscles to stay relaxed, thus reducing or eliminating the frown lines and crow's feet.

Fillers, on the other hand, are used to fill in wrinkles and hollows in our face. As we age, we loose facial fat, which causes our skin to sag and lines to form. Fillers, such as Juvederm and Restylane, are injected into the folds and wrinkles to replace the fat that has been lost. It is also used in the cheeks to lift sagging skin back into place.

HE'S STILL HERE

JOAQUIN PHOENIX BRINGS THE HAMMER AS A HAUNTED LONER

IT'S ONLY APRIL, BUT YOU MIGHT NOT SEE A better film this year than Lynne Ramsay's electrifying experiment with narrative form, You Were Never Really Here, the 48-year-old's fourth in nearly two decades. Ramsay may not be as prolific as most of her peers, but between 1999's Ratcatcher, 2002's Morvern Callar, 2011's We Need to Talk About Kevin and this latest triumph—an ambitiously fragmented adaptation of Jonathan Ames' novella about a former FBI agent and Marine—the Glasgow-born writer/director never misses.

If suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder is anything like the disorienting flashes of sound and image that have been linked together with off-putting electronic music and atonal string cues, it's a nightmare best not experienced personally. But in Ramsay's hands, it's impossible to avert your eyes and ears from the PTSD-driven horrors.

Playing a role for which he was awarded Best Actor at last year's Cannes Film Festival, Joaquin Phoenix stars as Joe, a puzzle of a man we begin with precious little information about. But by the end of this tale's taut 90 minutes, you might wish you knew less, even as some pieces still remain missing from the lonely, haunting portrait of an Iraq war veteran who now rescues teenage women in trouble. The three-time Oscar nominee has proven to be a real chameleon over the years and, under Ramsay's guidance, he's taken on a frightening new shape, bulking up with misshapen muscle, a drinker's belly and a bushy graying beard that's nearly as unkempt as the one he sported in director Casey Affleck's I'm Still Here (2010).

"I hear you can be brutal," says Albert Votto (We Need to Talk About Kevin's Alex Manette), a slick senator who's hired the largely non-verbal Joe to retrieve his daughter Nina (newcomer Ekaterina Samsonov), a 13-year-old who's been kidnapped and forced into sexual slavery. He's heard correctly. Armed with little more than a hammer, Ramsay omits the handholding exposition and tidy resolutions that less adventurous viewers desire.

Phoenix's mercenary is a quiet pit bull suspended between life and death. With little to lose, Joe wouldn't think twice about taking his own empty life were it not for his dementia-stricken mother (Orange Is the New Black's Judith Roberts) he looks after in his childhood home. A violent man who suffered abuse at the hands of his long-dead father, he's a Lazarus figure whose aimless existence is given new purpose after his rescue effort doesn't go as planned. As bodies begin piling up, he's determined to finish the job that's gone south.

YOU WERE NEVER REALLY HERE ★★★★

Starring Joaquin Phoenix, Dante Pereira-Olson, Larry Canady, Vinicius Damasceno, Neo Randall, Judith Roberts, Frank Pando, John Doman, Edward Latham, Alex Manette, Claire Hsu, Denis Ozer, Tia-Sophia Bush, Lucy Lan Lao, Annie Mac-Yang, Lilian Tsang, Mengqi He, Rose De Vera, Tian-Lan Chaudhry, Ryan Martin Brown, Ace Ramsay, Ekaterina Samsonov, Silvia Pena, Jason Babinsky, Jonathan Wilde, Ronan Summers, Kate Easton, Scott Price, Novella Nelson, Madison Arnold, Leigh Dunham and Alessandro Nivola. Written by Lynne Ramsay, based on the book by Jonathan Ames. Directed by Ramsay. At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.

Obviously, Ramsay's grim, seedy nightmare noir won't be for everyone. Although much of the violence is implied, there's something viscerally unsettling about the sight of a raised hammer, its claw end about to shatter human flesh and bone. Forced to cut 17 pages from her script because of costs and a 29-day shooting schedule spread across 70 well-utilized locations throughout New York, Ramsay omits the handholding exposition and tidy resolutions that less adventurous viewers desire, putting the onus on us to piece together the conspiracy that's unfolding through flashes of Joe's tangled memories. But in the end, we're no less in the dark than Joe is—and ultimately, it doesn't really matter, since Ramsay's command of craft, disarming flashes of humor and sense of style infuse her man-on-a-mission mashup of John Boorman's Point Blank (1967) and Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver (1976) with a poetic grace that few artists achieve.

The contributions of three key collaborators, who previously worked with Ramsay on We Need To Talk About Kevin, also can't be overstated: sound designer Paul Davies, editor Joe Bini and especially composer Jonny Greenwood. Working almost exclusively with Paul Thomas Anderson and now Ramsay, the lead guitarist and keyboard player for Radiohead has earned his place as an indispensable component of those artists' films, establishing himself as one of the pre-eminent musicians working in movies. But a great score can only do so much if it's in support of less ambitious filmmaking—and that's certainly not the case here.

Take the sequence when Joe enters a three-story brownstone in midtown Manhattan to liberate the emotionally comatose young girl from her captors in the brothel that serves as their sick playground. Like a wrecking ball, he bounds from room to room, using the element of surprise—and his hammer—to crush all that stands in his way. Captured almost entirely from a series of security cameras, Ramsay jumps from one static angle to another, cutting from Joe's raised arm to an empty frame, then eventually back to the results of his rampage. And then quite unexpectedly, she ends on a grace note of tenderness, as this man who's haunted by those he was unable to help in his past is briefly redeemed by the compassion he's able to show in the present. ◆

STEVEN WILSON

CINEMA SHOW

BRITISH PROG-ROCK REVIVER ADJUSTS HIS VISION WITH INSPIRATION FROM '80S POP

STEVEN WILSON SEALED HIS REPUTATION as a guiding force of modern prog-rock through conceptual albums and concerts that mixed dramatic sweeps, sinuous changeups and ominous imagery akin to '70s predecessors Pinky Floyd and Rush.

But the English singer/multi-instrumentalist came of age in the '80s. Before he made last year's To the Bone, he listened to records from that era that were both pop and progressive, such as Peter Gabriel's So, Kate Bush's Hounds of Love and Tears for Fears' The Seeds of Love.

"I missed that kind of record," says Wilson, 50, whose parents weaned him on ABBA and Donna Summer as well as Floyd. "That's a really hard thing to pull off—to maintain your personality and to keep that experimental edge whilst making something that potentially has mass appeal."

For his fifth solo album, the former Porcupine Tree frontman says he cut back on conceptual rock elements to focus on the songs and melodies, though he stayed open to lyrical and sonic experimentation. While To the Bone doesn't dig into one subject the way that 2015's Hand. Cannot. Erase. exposed the life and death of Joyce Carol Vincent (a woman whose corpse went unnoticed in her apartment for three years), the new album addresses weighty, topical issues such as the shifting nature of truth and the looming face of terrorism in melancholy tones.

"That tells me one thing: At the end of the day, everyone can appreciate a catchy pop song."

Yet there's joy and hope in the falsetto-spiced keyboard glide of "Permanating," a song that winks at '80s hitmakers like A-ha or ELO.

"Every night, 'Permanating' gets the biggest reaction of all," Wilson says the day after a three-night stand at London's Royal Albert Hall, ahead of a U.S. tour where he'll bring his crack band to the Berklee Performance Center on April 27. "I was surprised by that, because I was expecting there'd be a little dissent from the old prog-rockers. But no. Everyone gets swept along with it, and ultimately that tells me one thing: At the end of the day, everyone can appreciate a catchy pop song."

Wilson acknowledges that he'd like to expand his audience—British newspaper The Daily Telegraph called him "probably the most successful British artist you've never heard of"—and suggests that "In any other era, 'Permanating' would have and could have been a massive mainstream hit." However, it's difficult for a rock artist to rival today's hip-hop and pop on streaming services, says Wilson, who after shying away from that platform has recently seen five tracks from To the Bone reach a million Spotify plays. He expects young new listeners are part of that, "because streaming is a demographic that hasn't been familiar with my music until now."

Such fans likely take an opposite mindset from the reissue crowd that knows Wilson from his remixing of classic albums in 5.1 surround sound—an endeavor that spread from prog icons King Crimson and Jethro Tull to more pop-conscious acts XTC (whose Andy Partridge co-wrote some lyrics on To the Bone) and Simple Minds. Says Wilson, "There's been almost a parallel between my mixing career and my music, opening up to more mainstream artists and crossing into other genres."

When it comes to his process and philosophy on remixing—and why so many bands hire him—the four-time Grammy nominee says, "I'm a fan of the music. I do it with sympathy and enough reverence that I do what I think is the right thing to do by that record and by that artist. I say that because there's a history of people that have come to these remix projects and they clearly have no empathy for the music. ... People were trying to modernize the sound of vintage records, and I don't do that. I'm very much the opposite. I try to get as much of a vintage sound as I can."

Wilson's concerts also nod to the legacy of bands like Pink Floyd through quadrophonic sound as well as thematic visual projections that reflect his fascination with cinema. "I'm looking to create that cinematic experience," he says. "I'm looking to put the audience inside the music." ◆

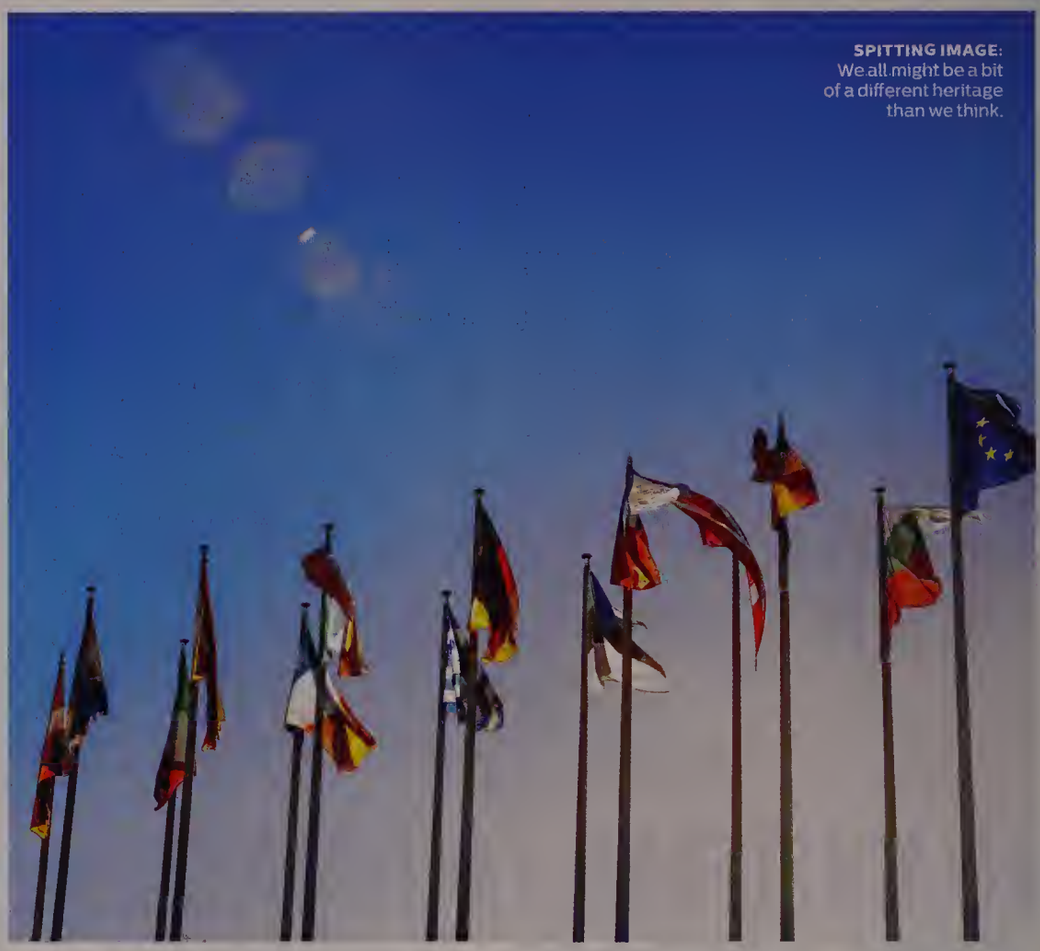
MAN OF ALL NATIONS

A DNA TEST OPENS UP A DOUBLE HELIX FULL OF QUESTIONS

HAVE YOU EVER WONDERED WHERE you came from, where the distant branches of your family tree might lead, what kind of marvelous and profound bonds with your fellow human beings might be revealed? Me neither, but I took a DNA test anyway.

I always figured that my lineage must go back to some Middle Ages dude who would dye people's clothes. A guy would walk up, covered in feces and bubonic plague, and say, "Ay, you, Dyer, dye my frock silver or I'll slit your throat!" And my great-great grandpa to the 10th power would say, "As you wish, m'lord," and dip the frock in his trusty vat of mercury while muttering that old age is no fun and frankly he didn't even care if he lived to see 23. That was my father's side.



On my mother's side, my nana came over from Italy in 1908, which I know because she told me all about it. Back then, if you only worked 80 hours a week, you were some kind of lazy 10-year-old. She thought she was from somewhere around Naples but didn't really know. And probably didn't care. Because if early-20th-century Manhattan was a step up, then her part of Italy would've gotten a really bad TripAdvisor rating. "Ugh. Mafia and garbage fires. Take the first boat to Ellis Island. One star."

So, of what I know, I'm Italian and British. Yeah, I like pasta, but I also get sunburns. So what? Enter AncestryDNA, which promises to reveal your genetic blueprint and paint a more detailed picture. As far as I can tell, the business plan is to let boring white people think that they're mildly interesting. I wish I'd thought of that.

Soon after I ordered the test, a small cardboard box arrived in the mail. Inside was a vial, for dribbling spit into, and a blue fluid that acts as a preservative. The instructions said to avoid eating or drinking anything for a half-hour before the test, a condition that I found surprisingly hard to obey. The first thing my DNA test revealed is that I'm a grazer all day long.

The second thing it revealed is that I come from a long line of people who don't follow instructions. A few weeks after I mailed back the test, I got an email informing me that the sample was unusable. They sent me another test kit, but this time I needed to wait an hour after eating. They didn't elaborate on what happened, but I imagine a white-coated technician squinting at a test tube and declaring, "Well, either this sample is tainted or his uncle is a ham sandwich."

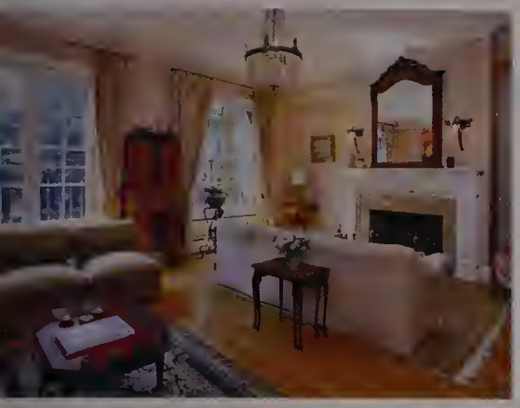
I got it right the second time. An email informed me that my results were ready, and I logged in with no small amount of trepidation. Who am I? What am I? And it turns out... mostly British. No surprise there. But in second place, with 12 percent: Iberian Peninsula. I'm only a little less Iberian than the guy on an AncestryDNA ad getting his Portuguese passport! I once bribed a go-go dancer in Barcelona to chase me up a stripper pole and pose at the bottom like she trapped me up there, so now I know exactly where that impulse came from: my British side. Brits love doing stupid stuff in Spain. It's their Florida.

SPITTING IMAGE: We all might be a bit of a different heritage than we think.

The business plan is to let boring white people think that they're mildly interesting.

Further down in the results, I discovered that I'm 3 percent European Jewish. I haven't decided whether I'm going to be 3 percent Jewish all of the time or 100 percent Jewish 3 percent of the time, but I guess it'll depend on how busy I am with Iberian stuff. I'm also less than 1 percent from the Caucasus, which is a great excuse to write "Caucasus."

Once you get your results, you can choose whether to share them with any distant family that might've taken the test. Uh, no thanks. I'm pretty sure that if I share my results, I'm not going to learn that Jeff Bezos is my long lost uncle and he wants to give me a free Prime membership. No, I'll find out I'm second cousins with a guy named Skeeter who just got paroled and is looking for some pet-sitting help because it turns out ferrets can get addicted to nicotine just like anyone else and then they're a real handful, believe it or not. So I decided to keep my results private.



For a week or so. Eventually the curiosity got to me and, against my better judgment, I shared my info with whatever family might be out there. The closest match is a second cousin, but so far neither of us has contacted the other. Probably to our mutual relief.

While my results were interesting, I'm leery of a private company owning my DNA and I question the wisdom of making that information visible to strangers. My impulse is to shut down the account now that I have the results, but I think I'll keep it active for a while. Sooner or later, I might need someone to watch my ferrets. ◆

MONEY TALKS

SOUND ADVICE ON SAFE INVESTMENTS, CHILLY COLLEAGUES AND WEATHERING STORMS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

OK, so is now a good time to get into the stock market? After the recent downturn, I figure that there must be some bargains. I don't have a lot to invest, but I'm still young enough to take some risks—I think. I am in my mid-30s, unmarried and don't have much debt. I have managed to save around $38,000. I have a small 401(k) that I put 10 percent of my income into. Should I dive into the market now or save for a house? Should I wait for things to go down even further? Or have I missed the boat already? You have age in your favor and should concentrate on the growth of your money—not in bonds, in my opinion. Right now, income from your stocks is not as important. Put your toes into the water gently, spending a quarter of your cash now. Invest it in areas you believe will grow in the future: robotics, biotech and health care, etc. Move your money slowly as you go. When you see sell-offs that frighten others, invest the rest of your saved cash, little by little, in the same original areas, thus lowering your cost per stock and preparing for eventual growth in the future. Creation of wealth takes time, not in-and-out trading. Trust your instincts.

I am a woman in my mid-30s and have a successful career. Unfortunately, I end up leaving and starting at a new company every year or so. It's not my bosses—they've been great—but my female co-workers who hate me. I am attractive and all of my bosses have happened to be men, though they don't single me out for special treatment. Some woman in every office has it out for me. My female supervisor or manager starts with complaints about my work or hours—nothing is ever good enough. I finally get worn down and quit. I'm worried that my resume does not look great with all of these employers listed. Is there a way I can befriend these women so they don't see me as a threat? Or should I find a job working only with men, since they seem to treat me more fairly? If you're being totally honest with me—which I'm not sure you are—you have to look at how you present yourself to others. In your case, it's female co-workers. What about female friends? Do women you meet socially have the same negative reactions to you?

I have a number of female friends who are all mentored, encouraged and promoted by strong men. So, good for you, if men with office power recognize your value. But if you're contributing to a dysfunctional workplace, you may have problems wherever you go. And if you're in Boston, you're not going to find many places where women are not an integral part of the environment.

Put your toes into the water gently, spending a quarter of your cash now.

I like to solve problems with some common sense, but I'll make an exception with you. If you have the same problem at multiple jobs, I would make appointments to see the men who encouraged you in the past. Ask them honestly what they think you were doing to alienate female workers and what you could do to change the pattern.

I was recently in a part of California where the wildfires devastated so much territory. And then, the mudslides raced down the mountains, leveling homes and killing people as they slept. Friends of mine, who were evacuated from their homes, had minutes to pack a bag and leave. A lot of people stayed, never really believing it would be as bad as it was. Weeks later, rain was predicted and evacuations were again called for, but no disaster followed. Does paranoia play a role? Are new weather patterns unsettling our lives even more? My simple response is yes. Weather can be even more frightening than political upheaval or increasing global and domestic violence.

In Santa Barbara, 300 homes were destroyed and 18 people lost their lives, many carried away by mudslides mixed with giant boulders that rolled people miles away from their homes. It was horrifying and it can linger in one's mind. As to fear: When I grew up, the radio predicted the weather a day in advance and people reacted to it, worked around it, went to work and mostly went to school. Now, predictions can take place weeks in advance of events and—assaulted by endless predictions of doom—we're all whipped into a frenzy that's too often not worth the alarm. It's usually the total surprises that really damage us: Fires suddenly out of control, record-breaking hurricanes, 9/11, the meltdown of financial systems and mass killings. Almost all are impossible to predict. Social networks now keep us on a constant high-anxiety track.

Weather will continue to punish us when we least expect it. Just the way that the rest of life so often treats us horribly. It's why I constantly emphasize finding some joy every day—something to laugh at or someone to laugh with. The more engaged in life you are, the less you'll obsess about dangers you cannot control. ◆

RIDING THE WAVES

THE RADIO CO-HOST SOUNDS OFF ON THE COUGH BUTTON, EARLY MORNINGS AND MEETING DAN AYKROYD

MIX 104.1 MORNING PERSONALITY KENNEDY ELSEY, 47, is co-host of the popular show Karson and Kennedy. Born in Virginia, she was raised outside of Chicago and studied theater at Drake University. She has lived in numerous places around the world (as a former military wife), and worked in Tallahassee, Florida, and Memphis, Tennessee, before moving to Boston in 2009. She lives in East Boston with her dog, Elvis.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Are you a morning person?
KENNEDY ELSEY: Yeah. Always have been. I'm obnoxious.

So what's your schedule? I like to be in bed, under the blankets, by 8 o'clock—so I have no life. And I wake up between 3 and 3:30, or whenever my dog Elvis stands over me, breathing heavily.

Waking up that early doesn't bother you? Look, it's something that you never get used to. I don't care how long you do this gig. Three o'clock is still really fucking early. It hurts. And the older you get, the more it hurts. And if you have to do an event that night, well, it hurts even worse. But mortgages must be paid, my friend, so off to work we go.

Best part of your job? My favorite thing is when you run into someone who listens to the show and they let you know that you make them laugh while they sit in traffic for two hours. Because first of all, I don't understand how people do that. It blows my mind. I would move, or not take that job. But at the end of the day, we get to make people laugh, and I don't know any job that's better than that.

Worst part? Hmm. Well, if you mess up, quite a few people hear it. In this day and age, with social media and instant communication, people let you know the second you say something wrong. When you're wrong, you know it fast.

What happens if you have to sneeze, or cough, or you have a frog in your throat? We have a little thing in the studio that's called a cough button, so you push that and it turns off your mic. However, as Karson has yelled at me numerous times when I've used said cough button to clear my throat—which is an awful habit that I have—"There are five other microphones that are still on in here."

What do you think makes you good on radio? I feel like I'm a strong female voice. A lot of the time as co-host, you're there to laugh at the other person's jokes, or to do little things and not be part of the conversation. But my name is on the show, and I'm half of this conversation. That's what makes us so different. That's what makes Karson such a great partner. He recognizes that. We're equals in this thing. And I'm able to speak for those women who don't always get to speak out.

What's your typical work outfit? So when I first started doing this job, I was like, "Pajamas for life!" But then you quickly realize that this is still a business, and it behooves you to make a bit of an effort. I don't necessarily put on a full face of makeup, but I put on something cute that I can wear out later, assuming later isn't a fancy restaurant. [Laughs.]

Favorite genre of music? The '80s. All that New Wave stuff from England. I live for Duran Duran.

Worst on-air faux pas? This is a terrible story, but it's the worst thing I've ever done. The singer Brandy, if you'll recall, had a car accident on a bridge. It was years later, but we got to interview her. This was in Memphis, and they had told us not to bring it up. We said, "Of course not!" So we were talking about something completely different, but I said, "Oh, my gosh, if somebody saw me do that, I'd drive myself off a bridge." I looked at her and she looked at me, with that look like, "Girl, I know you didn't mean it. We're cool." But I wanted to crawl under the desk—under the building—and stay there.

"We're equals in this thing. And I'm able to speak for those women who don't always get to speak out."

Anybody you'd never have back on your show and why? There's nobody I wouldn't have back, because there's an opportunity there, especially if you had a really bad interview before. You can either fix it or make fun of it. But one person I know who won't come back is Nicolas Cage, which makes me very sad. We did an interview with him, and Karson asked him questions about Superman, because he named his kid Kal-El (Superman's real name from Krypton). Nicolas Cage got really pissed off at us for some reason, hung up the phone, called the PR person and said, "I never want to be interviewed by them again." It makes me sad, because my phone case is Nicolas Cage's face.

Pop star who had you completely starstruck? Well, he's not a pop star, but Dan Aykroyd had me completely starstruck. I'm a huge Blues Brothers fan. I was raised in Chicago, and the first year I was here in Boston, he opened the House of Blues. He walked into the studio, and I just stopped talking and didn't get it back together for at least five or six minutes. It was very embarrassing.

Craziest stunt you ever pulled on air? [Laughs.] I have two. When I ran the Boston Marathon for Children's Hospital, I said that if we could raise $10,401, I would shave my hair into a mohawk. So we did, and I did. But back in Memphis, or Tallahassee, we decided that it would be very funny for me to get pierced live on the air. So I got my nose and my lady parts pierced live on the air. [Laughs.] By all accounts, I made some very strange noises that day.

TOP 5 THINGS TO EAT AT 3 AM

- An Awaken 180 chocolate shake
- Half a head of lettuce with Italian dressing
- Kraft Easy Mac & Cheese from the vending machine
- Grapefruit with salt, not sugar
- Leftover steak from Del Frisco's or Davio's

Top three artists in heavy rotation in your music library? Well, I'm on a Sinead O'Connor kick. And my friend just made me watch a chick flick and Erin McCarley had a song on the soundtrack, so I downloaded the album the other day. And Duran Duran, always.

Go-to karaoke song? "Separate Ways" by Journey. And I kill it. I don't mean to toot my own horn, but I crush it.

You're super open about your struggles with depression and bipolar disorder. What one thing do you want people to know? That you don't have to be scared of it. That I'm not going to break. And that anyone who's like me isn't going to break, either. You can live a happy and full life—there are just moments when you think you can't. And to have people around you, supporting you, is so very important.

Favorite spot in Boston? Castle Island and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. ◆

Twenty-four of the hottest—and coolest—drinks for each hour of the day

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF
PHOTOGRAPHED BY SOPHIE FABBRI AND HOLLY RIKE

WATERMELON WATER

$36, pack of 12

Hydrate like an athlete with DRINKmaple's Watermelon Water. "It's nature's sports drink," co-founder Kate Weiler says of the Concord-based company's new offering. The electrolyte-packed elixir of pure watermelon is sourced from an organic farm in Puerto Rico—and has a self-explanatory name: "It tastes like the juice when you bite into a watermelon."

7:00 am

BELLA DONOVAN COFFEE

California-based Blue Bottle Coffee knows about rising and grinding, with two Boston locations set to open later this year on the heels of the February opening of its first Massachusetts spot in Harvard Square. For those with a similarly packed to-do list, Blue Bottle coffee buyer Charlie Habegger recommends a cup of Bella Donovan—a blend he describes as "a fruit-forward Ethiopia and a syrupy sweet, earthy Sumatra"—to kick-start your day.

8:00 am

GREEN MYLK

$9.75

The key ingredient to Burnin' by Ray's Green Mylk from Body Tonic is the almond "mylk," freshly made in batches by hand-squeezing almonds that have been soaked overnight to activate the enzymes. The rest of the drink avoids relying on the typical sugary fruit, instead using greens, turmeric, ginger and a dash of local honey. The cleansing and detoxifying beverage is now available at its Belmont location, and you can soon try it in the Seaport when Burnin' by Ray opens this summer.

9:00 am

COFFEE SANGRIA

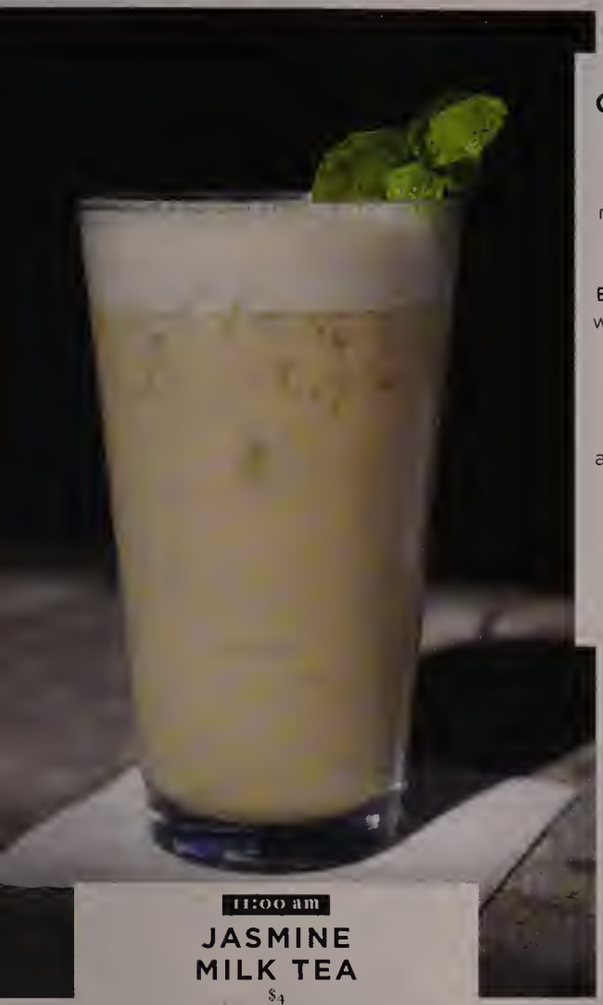
When the team at George Howell Coffee was devising a new coffee drink, they knew it had to be simple to make in batches—so it can be served easier—and they also wanted it to feel like a cocktail. Welcome, the coffee sangria. Debuting this month at the Godfrey Hotel cafe, it's made with Colombian coffee, honey, Trinity bitters, hopped grapefruit bitters, blueberry phosphate, lemon, lime and pineapple juices, as well as apples and muddled raspberries. Served cold in a rocks glass, it's also available hot as a Cloud Nine.



10:00 am

PEANUT BUTTER BANSHEE

$12

Bar manager Joe Slavinski's newest brunch cocktails at Russell House Tavern are flashbacks to sugary breakfast cereal favorites. The Peanut Butter Banshee features Giffard Banane du Bresil, Tempus Fugit creme de cacao and milk, though the star ingredient is a house-infused peanut butter cereal rum, which adds a kick to the milky peanut butter, vanilla, banana and chocolate flavors.

11:00 am

JASMINE MILK TEA

Owners Jeffrey and Jamie Yu want patrons to feel at home at Abide, so the brother-sister duo serve jasmine milk tea, a beverage reminiscent of their childhood. The imported tea with delicate floral notes is shaken with creamy local milk and organic brown sugar to temper the liquid and create a light foam; then it's poured over ice and garnished with fresh mint.

noon

GREEN FIZZ

$10

This spa-inspired mocktail proves you don't need alcohol to have fun. Bar Boulud's Green Fizz, which debuted at the start of April, combines fresh-pressed cucumber juice, simple syrup and lime juice before the verdant-hued mixture is poured over ice, topped with club soda and garnished with a cucumber slice.

1:00 pm

HALF & HALF

$4, pack of 4

Spindrift teed up this March release after more than two years of work. The Arnold Palmer-inspired Half & Half includes the Newton company's signature triple-filtered sparkling water with fresh lemon juice and brewed Argentinian black tea. Swing into Whole Foods or Trader Joe's to give it a shot.

2:00 pm

SAHLAB

Israeli-based eatery Café Landwer gave Boston a taste of its Mediterranean fare when its first U.S. location opened near Audubon Circle in January. That includes sahlab, a hot beverage that combines an Israeli-imported powder and steamed milk for a frothy sip that's sprinkled with crushed nuts, cinnamon and coconut.

3:00 pm

HANAMI TEA

$18, 2.82 oz loose leaf tea

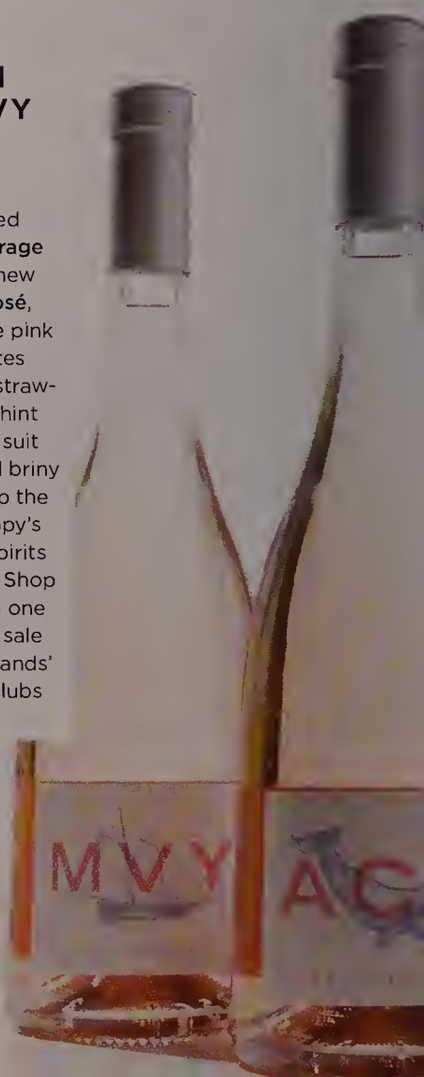
Inspired by the annual Japanese Cherry Blossom Festival, Tea Forté's Hanami tea blends organic green tea, tart cherries and flower petals for a fragrant and fruity flavor that snagged the 2018 silver medal at the Global Tea Championships. It's meant to capture the experience of spring in a cup, and you can savor it for yourself when the Concord-based company opens its first retail store on Newbury Street this spring.

4:00 pm

AVOCADO SMOOTHIE

$4.50

The co-owners of Reign Drink Lab tapped their Vietnamese backgrounds for this avocado smoothie that blends the superfood with condensed milk, sugar and ice for a creamy sip. The Dorchester boba shop and cafe, which started as a weekend pop-up inside Tam Le's father's Pho Hoa in 2016, will bring its nitrogen-infused cold brew and teas to SoWa this spring.



5:00 pm

ACK/MVY ROSÉ

Boston-based Latitude Beverage uncorked its new ACK/MVY Rosé, Provence-made pink sips with notes of raspberries, strawberries and a hint of peach that suit lobster rolls and briny oysters. Pick up the bottles at Kappy's Fine Wine & Spirits and BRIX Wine Shop locations, with one dollar of each sale going to the islands' Boys & Girls Clubs chapters.

6:00 pm

ZEUS HARD CIDER

$3.50

Named after the Urban Grape owners' golden retriever, Zeus, cans of this limited-release cider collaboration with Far From the Tree hit the South End wine shop's shelves in March. After the Urban Grape team hand-picked feral heirloom apples, the fruit was left to sweat and soften for two weeks, pressed, then fermented for four months with wild yeast before carbonation, making for a lightly tart libation.

8:00 pm

PERPETUAL MOTION BAIJIU COCKTAIL

The inspiration behind this cocktail from Sumiao Hunan Kitchen came from the name, Perpetual Motion, referring to energy that theoretically continues forever. The mixture uses elderflower—a plant known for its medicinal purposes—and the floral-flavored Hong Kong Baijiu to create a cocktail with blood orange, lime wedges and muddled mint that will keep you going.

7:00 pm

NOCTURNE DUNKEL

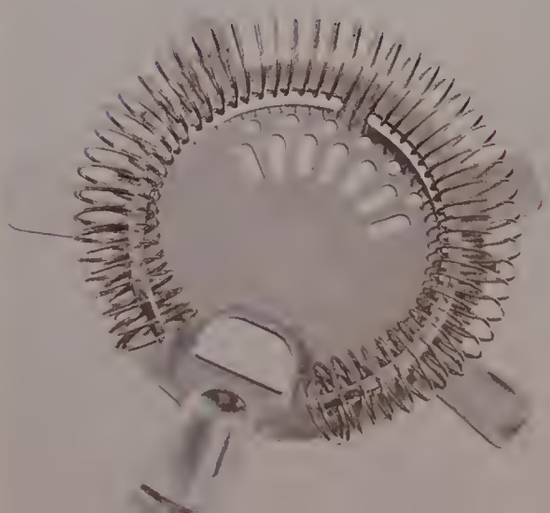
Made in collaboration with Night Shift, this German-style dunkel lager from Lamplighter Brewing Co. was created with spring on the brain. Featuring caramel malts and German noble hops, Nocturne was fashioned as a winter-to-spring transition beer, boasting rich flavors like roasted chestnuts, pumpernickel bread and a toasted biscuit aroma. Enjoy it at the newly expanded Cambridge taproom.



9:00 pm

MAYFLOWER METHODE CHAMPENOISE SPARKLING WINE

Described as "the perfect sparkler for red wine drinkers," the newly released Mayflower methode champenoise sparkling wine from Westport Rivers is made with estate-grown pinot noir, pinot meunier and chardonnay, using a secondary fermentation in the bottle—the method relied on when creating Champagne. The just-north-of-Buzzards-Bay vineyard also uses a reserve red wine to add a subtle hint of barrel-aged dryness and notes of black cherry.

10:00 pm

SAFETY MEETING COCKTAIL

Bully Boy Distillers collaborated with the Langham Hotel, Sarma and Our Fathers during the past year to dream up bespoke gins. Next up: Lion's Tail's Old-Tom style, which finds a home in the floral and oaky Safety Meeting. Infused with butterfly pea flowers, the gin is mixed with Dolin Chambly vermouth, orange bitters, a dash of sea salt tincture and yellow and green Chartreuse that the South End bar barreled for a month.

11:00 pm

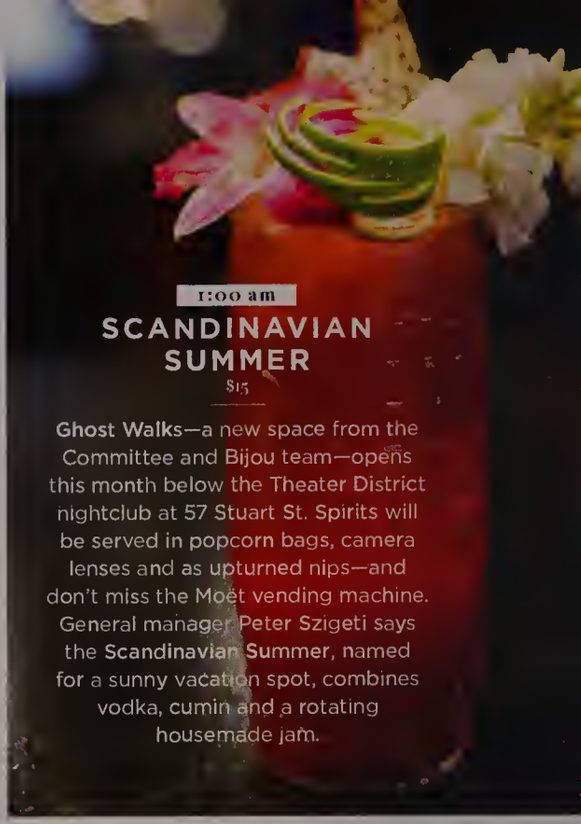
The secret to the full flavor of the JP Porter, the flagship porter brewed by Turtle Swamp Brewing in Jamaica Plain, is a chocolate rye malt from Valley Malt grown in Hadley. "It gives color, spiciness and a hint of sweet chocolate, and doesn't get too dark in the process," says John Lincecum, a biochemist who last year opened the local libation maker with Nik Walther.



midnight

YOU'RE WELCOME PUNCH

$165

Inspired by Moana, Tiki Rock's You're Welcome punch transports guests from the new Financial District spot to a tropical shore. Made using a blend of rum, freshly squeezed juices, maraschino sour cherry liquor and a chili tincture, the large-format cocktail is served over blue raspberry-infused ice cubes and topped with Cava in a custom-made volcano. Dry ice, fire and an additional bottle of bubbles make this drink best imbibed with friends—or Dwayne Johnson.

1:00 am

SCANDINAVIAN SUMMER

Ghost Walks—a new space from the Committee and Bijou team—opens this month below the Theater District nightclub at 57 Stuart St. Spirits will be served in popcorn bags, camera lenses and as upturned nips—and don't miss the Moët vending machine. General manager Peter Szigeti says the Scandinavian Summer, named for a sunny vacation spot, combines vodka, cumin and a rotating housemade jam.

2:00 am

PUTNAM NEW ENGLAND SINGLE MALT

$50, bottle

Using water from the Quabbin Reservoir, Boston Harbor Distillery bottled 200 cases of its 100-proof Putnam New England Single Malt in December after aging the coffee and chocolate-flecked spirit in heavily charred American Oak barrels. Grab a bottle at the Dorchester tasting room, where you can also sample it in a pineapple and blood orange juice cocktail with a jasmine-infused honey.

3:00 am

LAVENDER CHARCOAL LEMONADE

$10

To reap the benefits of activated charcoal, the juice geniuses at Nourish Your Soul concocted the best-selling lavender charcoal lemonade, which you can once again pick up in the city at its new Beacon Hill location. The lemon is cold-pressed before lavender, charcoal, Vermont maple syrup and filtered water are added to this drink that may become your new foolproof hangover cure.

4:00 am

LA FLACA JUICE

$10

Jugos supersized its brick-and-mortar footprint when it opened its South End Jugos Supremo digs in November. A fitting juice for the bigger space, the La Flaca—or the Skinny—packs a double punch with two times the kale, spinach and wheatgrass that you'd normally find in one of the company's bottled beverages. This nutrient-rich libation also includes cucumber, mint, pineapple, bee pollen and a hint of cayenne for added spice.

5:00 am

TAP WATER

Tap water? As in regular, ordinary, run-of-the-faucet H2O? In Boston, it's more like H2-whoa! Last year, the city's tap water won a taste test from water-quality experts as New England's Best Drinking Water and will be entered into a competition this summer to win the title of North America's best drinking water. The clear stuff meets all state and federal water standards and is sourced from the Quabbin and Wachusett Reservoirs. Bottles out and bottoms up—let the good stuff flow.

ON THE LINE Five years after the Boston Marathon bombings, the Boston Theatre Company presents a staged reading of its documentary play Finish Line, based on firsthand experiences of the tragedy's survivors. Over the course of nearly three years, co-creators Joey Frangieh and Lisa Rafferty interviewed 94 Bostonians who were affected by the bombings and wove their words into a narrative that was first staged in Boston last year. The pair selected 16 stories for these intimate portraits, including a mother of two, a news anchor, a trauma surgeon and a newspaper photographer. Cross the Finish Line one more time for this one-night event at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion on April 17. / Brynne Crawley

MOVIES

CHAPPAQUIDDICK ★★ ½ In July of 1969, while the American public was transfixed by the Apollo moon landing, a tragedy unfolded on Martha's Vineyard. Mary Jo Kopechne (House of Cards' Kate Mara), one of the late Bobby Kennedy's "boiler room girls," drowned while submerged inside a car that had been driven off a bridge by U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy (Australian actor Jason Clarke, looking, if not completely sounding, the part) after a late night of partying. Nearly 50 years later, there are still unanswered questions about what exactly happened in the aftermath. According to public record, the last son of Camelot fled the scene after he flipped his Oldsmobile into a pond on Chappaquiddick Island, not reporting the incident until 10 hours later. Was the young member of Ted's staff still alive when he took off, trapped to breathe her last gasps? First-time writers Taylor Allen and Andrew Logan speculate that's the case in their screenplay for journeyman director John Curran. In this fairly damning portrait, they stick to the popular narrative of the brother who was doomed to survive, never to become president because of his mysterious involvement in Kopechne's death. The film's account of a cover-up paints Ted as a flawed individual desperate to escape the shadow of his slain siblings, a man torn between taking the advice of his cousin, lawyer Joe Gargan (Ed Helms, strong in a non-comedic role)—who advises him to do right and resign—or continuing the family legacy. And like Ted, the film—though accomplished—never quite fulfills its early potential. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Seaport and in the suburbs.) Brett Michel

ANNIHILATION ★★★★ London-born Alex Garland's films are full of ideas. While he crammed too many into Ex Machina—the novelist-turned-screenwriter's debut picture as a writer/director—both of the sci-fi thrillers he scripted for director Danny Boyle—28 Days Later and Sunshine—tended to abandon a lot of his best ideas during their third acts, when cerebral notions gave way to slasher movie thrills. But Annihilation, a very loose adaptation of the first book in Jeff VanderMeer's Southern Reach Trilogy and Garland's second foray as a writer/director, relies far more on heady sci-fi concepts, even as it focuses on a mysterious mission undertaken by five female scientists armed with assault rifles. Natalie Portman stars as Lena, a biologist whose hollow eyes occasionally well up with tears as she struggles to accept that she may never again see her husband (Ex Machina's Oscar Isaac), who deployed a year ago on his own secretive mission and is presumed dead. That is, until he reappears one night, acting more confused than his shell-shocked wife. And then he begins to cough up blood. Turns out he's just emerged from "The Shimmer," a translucent, glistening—and growing—field of energy resembling a massive soap bubble that's enveloped a southern swath of coastal marshland. While viewers conditioned to expect spoon-fed answers to tidy narratives might want to stick with properties like Star Wars, those up for a challenge should prepare to lose themselves in the dreamlike qualities of Annihilation's aural and visual design, which transforms nightmares into a work of art. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Death of Stalin ★★★ This latest (and darkest) farce from Armando Iannucci (creator of HBO's Veep) may be set in 1953 and center on the political machinations of those orbiting Josef Stalin (Adrian McLoughlin) at the time of his death, but let's be honest: The bumbling oafs—barely able to continue the charade of Russia's totalitarian regime while plotting to stab each other in the back (or shoot each other in the forehead)—might as well be set in the here and now. And once you hear a bald-pated, flat-nosed Steve Buscemi continue to speak in his Brooklyn patois in his role as Nikita Khrushchev, or watch a bewigged Jeffrey Tambor nervously attempt to talk tough in his Southern California drawl as Stalin's successor, Georgy Malenkov, the similarities to our current White House are unmistakable. Based on a French graphic novel, the film opens as the Soviet dictator phones a concert hall, demanding a recording of the live performance he's just heard on the radio. But since the concert was not recorded, a panicked employee (Paddy Considine) frantically orders the orchestra and audience to sit back down for a repeat concerto, even though some of them have already departed. When a replacement conductor is summoned out of bed and taken away while still dressed in a bathrobe, he wishes his wife a final farewell, fearing the worst. And why not? After all, his neighbors across the hall are simultaneously being rounded up for execution. While not quite as sharp as Iannucci's last film (In the Loop, a satire of the politics of Bush and Blair), the humor nevertheless kills. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Isle of Dogs ★★★1/2 The artificiality that I'd once found so endearing in Wes Anderson's early triumphs—Rushmore and The Royal Tenenbaums—began to congeal in The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou and The Darjeeling Limited. I was so convinced that he'd boxed himself into an overly precious dollhouse constructed from his movies' intentional feeling of artifice that I mistook 2009's stop-motion animated Fantastic Mr. Fox—his delightful adaptation of Roald Dahl's book featuring meticulously sculpted sets and puppet characters—to be the film he'd spent a career building toward. But after his magical live-action hits Moonrise Kingdom and The Grand Budapest Hotel, I humbly—and happily—admit that I was wrong. Still, I was thrilled by the prospect of his return to hand-crafted animation with his latest piece of whimsy featuring anthropomorphized animals, Isle of Dogs. Based on an idea he concocted with Roman Coppola, Jason Schwartzman and Kunichi Nomura (who voices a villainous mayor modelcd after Toshiro Mifune), this Japan-set tale offers numerous pleasures, beginning with its huge cast of notable voice actors (Bryan Cranston leads a scrappy band of canines that also includes Edward Norton, Jeff Goldblum, Bob Balaban and Anderson MVP Bill Murray) and one newcomer (Koyu Rankin) as a boy in search of his lost dog (Liev Schreiber). And while it doesn't quite scratch the painful raw humanity and melancholy of the filmmaker's best, a newfound political dimension offers plenty to chew on. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Lean on Pete ★★★1/2 You've likely heard this one before: A teen boy enamored with a beat-up horse begs the bronco's gruff old trainer to race the steed again, convinced that he's worth more than a spot in the glue factory. Director Andrew Haigh has likely heard this tale as well. But after his previous successes (2011's Weekend and 2015's 45 Years), the fact that he's taken this shopworn template into unexpected directions is hardly a surprise. Haigh's latest film, Lean on Pete, is a tremendous heartbreaker, unafraid to punch you in the gut with harsh reality while remaining open to the possibility of hope. Haigh adapted Willy Vlautin's beloved novel himself and the British filmmaker sticks to the Pacific Northwest setting of the book. All the Money in the World's Charlie Plummer is exceptional as Charley Thompson, a lonely 15-year-old who's been drifting from place to place with his single father (Australian actor Travis Fimmel). Ray's an immature man who tempts fate when he sleeps with a married woman, setting a chain of events in motion that finds Charley hitting the road as an assistant to Del Montgomery (Steve Buscemi, Plummer's co-star on HBO's Boardwalk Empire), owner of the titular horse. Although seasoned jockey Bonnie (Chloë Sevigny) stresses that the aging Pete's not a pet, Charley's in love with the animal—and about to learn some painful lessons. Every one of these characters has been dealt bad hands, but Haigh earns your tears with his unflinching naturalism and a respect for those living on the fringes. (At Kendall Square.)

Love, Simon ★★★1/2 For anyone who's ever seen a John Hughes movie set in high school, Greg Berlanti's Love, Simon will feel familiar—but with a key difference: It's the first romantic comedy that focuses on a closeted gay teenager to be released by a major studio. Even more notable is how normal everything seems. All the teen movie tropes are here, from the best friends who suffer misunderstandings to the supportive parents with hearts of gold. Mind you, there's nothing in this affable film that offers the depth of the father/son heart-to-heart that devastates during the conclusion of Luca Guadagnino's exquisite Call Me by Your Name, but Nick Robinson (Jurassic World) will charm you as Simon Spier, the 16-year-old protagonist with a secret he's kept from those closest to him. Complicating matters, he's fallen for an anonymous gay classmate he chats with online, a relationship that's threatened to be exposed by Martin (Before I Fall's Logan Miller), a goofy loner who stumbles across Simon's heartfelt emails on a school computer when our hero accidentally leaves his Gmail logged in. The plot really gets rolling when Martin blackmails Simon into helping him win the affection of Abby (X-Men: Apocalypse's Alexandra Shipp), who's part of a close circle that also includes Nick (Brigsby Bear's Jorge Lendeborg Jr.) and lifelong friend Leah (Katherine Langford of Netflix's 13 Reasons Why). Despite an unnecessary bit of conflict that's quickly resolved in the final act, this is a sweet film that should speak to anyone who's ever felt alone. In other words: All of us. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

A Quiet Place ★1/2 When a sci-fi horror picture is really hitting all its notes, you can hear the suspense working its way through the audience, with audible gasps breaking up the silence between genuine screams. Since it opened in 1979, Ridley Scott's Alien has remained the gold standard for the genre. Much of this is due to the slow buildup to the awaiting terrors, allowing us to gain empathy for each character and raising the stakes once the little-seen title creature begins stalking them in a tense and deadly game of cat and mouse. Few of these strengths are present in Newton native John Krasinski's A Quiet Place, a film the actor co-wrote, directed and stars in with his wife, Emily Blunt. With the Earth overrun by aliens who pounce with their deadly piercers when they hear you, you must remain quiet to survive. Essentially a tight-knit thriller about a family of four picking up the pieces after the fifth and youngest member broke the silent rule, the movie skips the slow-build, throwing us right into the thick of the alien threat. After Lee (Krasinski) and Evelyn (Blunt) lose their adorable little moppet Beau (Cade Woodward) during the film's prologue, the film jumps ahead a year to when they've regrouped with their surviving son and daughter, the timid Marcus (Wonder's Noah Jupe) and the deaf Regan (hearing-impaired actress Millicent Simmonds of Wonderstruck). Krasinski's no Spielberg when it comes to presenting clear geography, which also hurts the suspense. Meanwhile, the CG beasties fail to inspire much fear—a fact I could hear through the deafening silence that permeated my screening. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

READY PLAYER ONE ★★ While it's not exactly a bad movie, it's hard to fathom who Ready Player One will truly appeal to. Well, other than director Steven Spielberg. I probably spotted more of the film's visual and aural "easter eggs" than most—since I've owned every video game console since the Magnavox Odyssey first hit stores in 1972. Couple that with the fact that I also grew up watching all of Spielberg's blockbusters, which informed the 2011 Ernest Cline book that serves as this cinematic sugar confection's loose inspiration. Still, I couldn't get through Cline's meta-novel, barely making it to page 50. TV's Family Guy already has the market cornered on pop culture references for references' sake, but simply recognizing something isn't enough to hold my interest. And Spielberg's movie is bursting with references to all things '80s (and beyond), which will have some geeks pausing through this picture frame by overstuffed frame when it hits video. But for now, you'll have to visit your local theater to try and get your jollies from this 2045-set nostalgia film, where 18-year-old blank Wade Watts (Tye Sheridan) dons a pair of virtual-reality goggles that make him resemble Cyclops, the character he plays in the X-Men movies. Set mostly within a gaudy VR world, with a plot out of Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory, there's either something here for everyone—or not enough for anyone. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

TOMB RAIDER ★1/2 True to form, the latest actress to fill the boots of tomb-raiding adventuress Lara Croft is leaping from an Oscar win into what she hopes will be her own lucrative action franchise, just like Angelina Jolie once did. Alas, Alicia Vikander (supporting actress winner for The Danish Girl) is wasted as Norwegian director Roar Uthaug moves the video game heroine from TV to the big screen for the third time in 17 years, spending far too much time sketching in an unnecessary backstory, while not nearly enough in the titular tomb. Essentially a pauper at the film's outset, Lara can't even afford her gym membership since she refuses to claim her father's fortune, which would entail admitting that he's dead. Strangely, a bicycle race through the streets of London provides the film's action highlight—and it occurs during the film's first 15 minutes. After a character asks why someone with her background would be a bike courier, you might wonder the same thing. Thirty minutes in, she's in Hong Kong, chartering a boat from Lu Ren (Daniel Wu), a drunk whose dad is also presumed dead. One shipwreck later, the pair are enslaved by the dastardly Matthias Vogel (The Hateful Eight's Walton Goggins) on the lost island of Yamatai, as they're forced to help him search for the mythical resting place of a cursed queen. As games, the Tomb Raider series used to be little more than tarted-up Indiana Jones knockoffs, but at least they were fun to play. This reboot of a knockoff of a knockoff simply bores. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

UNSANE ★★★ Midway through Steven Soderbergh's new thriller, a Major Hollywood Star appears as a Boston security consultant who tells the film's heroine, Sawyer Valentini (Claire Foy), to "think of your cellphone as your enemy." Certainly, that's good advice for a woman who goes so far as to uproot from Boston, leaving her friends and family behind to make a fresh start in Pennsylvania after two years of being terrorized by a stalker. But for Soderbergh, his smartphone is his best friend, at least on this project, since he shot it almost entirely with iPhones. And while it sounds like a gimmick, this decision lends an in-your-face immediacy to the picture; the filmmaker has a grand time staging the tale in exquisitely framed, personal space-invading close-ups and claustrophobia-inducing angles that are easily facilitated by the small size of his unconventional choice of camera. Rather than looking cheap, the images capture a certain queasiness, as though you're witnessing something that you shouldn't, especially once Sawyer is duped into committing herself for 24 hours of evaluation inside a secluded psychiatric hospital. Convinced that the stalker she escaped is now posing as a staff nurse, she violently lashes out, which results in an extension of her involuntary stay. Is she actually being held against her will, trapped in a facility with a dangerous man, or is she suffering from psychosis? This is a welcome return to more voyeuristic territory from Soderbergh, who launched his career nearly three decades ago with Sex, Lies, and Videotape. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Nathan Tavares

BUCKET LIST Identifiable by a white mask and empty bucket on his head, Buckethead's musical influence is more than simply a drop in the…bucket. After more than 20 years in the industry, the rock artist has pecked his way into quite a few headlines, from shredding chords for Guns N' Roses to releasing more than 300 studio recordings. The California musician, born as Brian Carroll, reportedly first used the getup to overcome stage anxiety, originally hatching the fictional persona of a man who was raised by chickens—hence what started out as a KFC bucket on his head as an homage to his feathered friends who ended up in the deep fryer. Plucking guitar strings and raising eyebrows, Buckethead flocks to the Wilbur Theatre on April 12. / Hannah McKennett

TAKE UP SPACE DeCordova Sculpture Park and Museum is making room for its spring exhibit, Lived Space: Humans and Architecture. Showcasing a collection of prints pulled from the permanent collection, it examines the emotional and physical connections we place on the spaces we create and make our own by bringing together artists influenced by their architectural surroundings. Find works by Arno Rafael Minkkinen, Abelardo Morell and Massachusetts-based artist Sarah Malakoff, who utilizes large-scale color photographs of quirky spaces to touch on deeper themes of identity, including her Untitled Interior, which features a lone lion statue hiding in the stairway of a psychedelic hallway. Enter Lived Spaces at deCordova through Sept. 30. / Julia Aparicio

LIVING TRUTHS

All parents keep secrets from their children, but Anya Yurchyshyn's parents kept more than most. In her heartbreaking memoir, My Dead Parents, Yurchyshyn investigates the secret lives her alcoholic mother and rage-filled father led before her birth. When orphaned at 32, Yurchyshyn discovered letters, journals and photographs that revealed the stiff, unhappy parents she thought she knew were once a couple filled with unbridled passion. But the evidence isn't all bliss, as she discovers that the car crash that killed her father may not have been an accident. Uncover the truth on April 11, when Yurchyshyn visits Newtonville Books. / Brynne Crawley

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

CHARLESMARK HOTEL AND LOUNGE [655 Boylston Street, Boston, 617- 247 -1212, Charlesmarkhotel.com] 40 room Luxury boutique hotel. Located at the marathon finish line across from the BPL. Location, value and ambiance are keys to their success. The lounge is a stylish popular neighborhood after work location featuring Martinis and flatbread pizzas. Wine tasting parties are famous here. Private event space available. Coming this fall a new restaurant concept . Stay tuned.

MUST BE RUFF...

The Boch Wang Theatre provided an appropriately dramatic backdrop for the American Repertory Theater's Gala, which began with a cocktail reception in the ornate marble lobby and continued with a dinner and program on the stage.

Among the throng: the evening's honoree, Paul Buttenwieser, and his lovely other half, Katie, co-chairs Ann and Graham Gund and Jerry Jordan, his swanlike mother, Barbara, with husband Bob Pemberton, soignee Kitty Creighton and her adoring other half, Peter, Chestnut Hillions Kasey Kaufman and Michael Horwitz, Gallic charmer Coco Montagu and his flawless wife, Kyra, Gardner head honcha Peggy Fogelman, ICA grand poobah Jill Medvedow, A.R.T. artistic director Diane Paulus, the improbably tall Onnie Mayshak with the impossibly gorgeous Katie, travel titan Jim Moses, banking babe Dyan Goodwin and the ever-affable Rob Serio, brunette bombshell Rachael Goldfarb and her main squeeze, Mark Slovenkai, uber arts supporters Cokie and Lee Perry, the radiant Ursula Liff, brilliant composer Tod Machover, outgoing Harvard president Drew Faust, incoming Harvard president Larry Bacow, Wang chief Joe Spaulding, A.R.T. board member Candy Gold, and the Holy Trinity of Boston society—Susan Paine, Barbara Hostetter and Lillie Johnson—whose presence confirmed, in case anyone was wondering, that they were definitely in the right place.

The dinner was a glittering affair, and the live auction was blessedly short, while the evening's highlight was undoubtedly the sneak peak of Jagged Little Pill, the upcoming musical based on the Alanis Morissette album of the same name.

"I have a confession," said one guest. "I can't stand Alanis Morissette," to which a friend replied, "Well, she only has nice things to say about you."

However, the evening's best remark came from the woman who proudly proclaimed, "Ivanka Trump blocked my dog on Twitter."

AND THE WINNER IS...

Beantown tore a major page out of Tinseltown's playbook when the Ellie Fund hosted its 22nd annual Red Carpet Gala at the Fairmont Copley Plaza to watch the Academy Awards.

Complete with a red carpet, fashion commentary courtesy of everyone there, and a cocktail hour that made the most self-congratulatory four hours of television palatable, there were also delicious food stations prior to the seated portion of the evening, when the awards ceremony was simulcast in the ballroom.

Present and accounted for: the charity's executive director Gail Fine and her dapper other half, Channel 5 GM Bill, beauty mogul Charla Jones, the stunning Karen Holmes Ward, restaurateur extraordinaire Tiffani Faison Walsh, the eternally sparkly Denise Dunbar and her dashing dude, Steve, party pair Donald Dallaire and David Handy, the drop-dead gorgeous Jessica Hennessy and her sizzling slice of beefcake, AJ Maini, the beyond smooth Dave Faddis, power couple Uzo and Erik Erlingsson, fashion plate Ashley Bernon, eternal ray of sunshine Elisha Daniels, Microsoft muckety muck Kate Shamon, silver-tongued emcee Billy Costa, arts booster Ellen Slaby, the unfairly attractive Christina and Ryan Pierce, the fairy godmother of real estate Sonja Salemi, force of nature Penny Fireman, and the absurdly attractive April Soderstrom and Ben Rawitz.

The evening's best exchange: A woman announced to a friend that she was pregnant, to which the response was, "It was either that or you just had a boob job." ◆

IN MEMORIAM...

When I was a kid, my parents made the very questionable decision of allowing me to have a small television on my bedside table. Being nocturnal from birth, I would stay up late on Sunday nights, fending off the Monday back-to-school ickys by watching classic movies on WCVB-TV's "The Great Entertainment."

The show was hosted by a handsome, tuxedo-clad gentleman named Frank Avruch, whom I didn't realize I already knew from his previous incarnation as the original Bozo the Clown. Years later, after I was lucky enough to call him a friend, I told him that he had turned me on to Billy Wilder, Hitchcock, Capra, Cukor and all the stars of Hollywood's Golden Age.

His response: "Aren't movies magical?"

Avruch died in March. Always a perfect gentleman, onscreen and off, he was quick to laugh, gracious and kind, with a voice like liquid silver and a charm he seemed wholly unaware of.

Now, when I think back on his influence in my life, both before and after I knew him personally, he stands out as a tremendously reassuring presence, both the consummate clown and the suave sophisticate I've always wanted to be. My heart goes out to his wonderful wife, Betty, and their two sons.

Boston's answer to Cary Grant is gone, and it'll take shoes much larger than Bozo's to fill his.

Avez-vous dish? Dirt? A spectacular social occasion? Call J.S. at 617-859-1400, ext. 303, or send an email to jonathan@improper.com.

FRESH TALK

THIS ISSUE'S THEME DOESN'T have spring in its name, but it sure feels like it does. The Beauty + Style issue resonates as fresh and new from the cover to the final page. Our cover subject is Boston native Julia Jones, the former Boston Ballet student who hit the big time nearly a decade ago with her role in Twilight and is set for a recurring role on the new season of Westworld, HBO's latest hit drama. The Boston Latin grad chats about working with Quentin Tarantino, breaking bread with Adam Sandler and admiring Westworld's otherworldly female creator.

There's more powerful women in this issue, with beauty entrepreneurs Gianne Doherty and Charla Jones talking with Jonathan Soroff about the industry's push toward natural products and how women of color struggle for more mainstream representation. Elsewhere, Julia Aparicio chats with the gardener who's been tending to the plants at the Gardner Museum for nearly five decades, Ezra Dyer writes about how he really, really wants to shave but his wife might not let him and we gather up local vintage and consignment purveyors to recreate favorite old photos. Oh, and on that final page of the magazine don't miss a little tidbit about Shakespeare on the Common this year. It might be starting to feel like spring, but summer still can't come soon enough.

KING OF THE COURTYARD

THE GARDNER'S HORTICULTURIST APPROACHES A LANDMARK ANNIVERSARY

VEGETATION EDUCATION

Kozak shares a few tips for all those hoping to get their backyard patios looking like the Gardner's courtyard.

· To get the deep blue hue of the hydrangeas, Kozak adds aluminum sulfate to his soil. It can even change pink hydrangeas to blue.

· Planting from seed packets can be tricky, as they tend to be fine and clump together. To alleviate this, Kozak adds a little bit of sugar to the packet and shakes it up so the seeds spread evenly when they're placed in the soil.

· When left unkempt, nasturtiums will naturally morph into a bush-like shape. To get them to grow long like the famed nasturtiums that hang from the Gardner terraces, continuously groom and pick off the flowers as they develop. Kozak does this in the greenhouses when he starts preparing them 10 months ahead of the springtime display.

The Constant Gardener

For nearly half a century, Stan Kozak has cultivated his status as the green thumb behind the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's courtyard displays. Kozak—who joined the Gardner staff when he was 17 years old—is the fourth horticulturist in the museum's history and its longest-standing one. As he nears the 50-year mark at the Gardner, his influence is still in full bloom.

For the rest of the year, Kozak is once again collaborating on the courtyard spectacle with landscape designer Julie Moir Messervy, who has also worked with the Museum of Fine Arts and the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, as well as assisting Yo-Yo Ma in designing the Toronto Music Garden. Aside from fine-tuning the displays, the pair plan to blend hydrangeas in with a bunch of iteas.

"I always work with designers to tweak the courtyard," Kozak explains. "We do have a game plan that's been etched in stone for years to highlight certain stars of the show, but we like to experiment and get different ideas."

As part of turning over the seasonal displays every four to six weeks, Kozak and his team oversee the transportation of plants and other gardening materials from greenhouses located nearly 30 miles away in Hingham. Kozak is often replacing flora and greenery throughout the year—no easy feat, with the unreliable New England weather and temperamental plants that might need to be swapped out two to three different times during a display's run.

Kozak has nearly as much history with the museum as the cuttings and seedlings from the courtyard's almost 500 specimens—some of which can be traced back to Isabella Stewart Gardner's day. The former Jamaica Plain High School student began his career as an intern working alongside the museum's horticulturist, John Sullivan, as part of the school's curriculum. It was Sullivan who convinced Kozak—who had planned to attend UMass Boston—to stick around after graduation. Some 50 years later, Kozak believes his horticultural education is perennial.

"I knew I could learn a lot from those guys who had been doing this for as long as I've been doing it now," Kozak says. "But there's still a lot to learn. I'm still learning now after being here for 48 years." / Julia Aparicio

PETAL PUSHERS

Florals? For spring? Groundbreaking. Celebrate the season with a bouquet of flower-focused events. / Cathryn Height

1 The New England Wild Flower Society hosts Trillium Week at Garden in the Woods on May 6-12. Home to New England's most extensive trillium collection, the Framingham floral paradise will bloom with 21 species of the tri-petal beauties, which take 4-7 years to blossom. Visitors should keep an eye out for the elegant trillium grandiflorum while enjoying guided tours, master workshops on picking and pruning the spring ephemerals and an evening of music and wine to close the festivities.

2 Petal peepers gather at Harvard University's Arnold Arboretum on May 13 for its Lilac Sunday, showcasing the institution's 397 lilac plants. The horticultural haven boasts 179 varietals that vary in color, shape, fragrance and origin—all of which hold the distinctive Plant Collections Network accreditation. Although these perennials are in peak bloom for about five weeks, Lilac Sunday is the only time when visitors can picnic on Arboretum grounds and partake in a guided tour of the collection.

3 Paintings meet petals at the Museum of Fine Art's Art in Bloom on April 27-29. Stemming from former director of membership Chuck Thomas' idea to interpret masterpieces with floral designs, the festival features fresh, fragrant arrangements created by New England garden clubs. Now in its 42nd year, the event includes talks and master classes led by British floral designer Joseph Massie—the visionary behind this year's signature arrangement—and the new Art in Bloom Market, showcasing goods from 12 artisans in the Shapiro Courtyard.

FLOW-AH POW-AH The Four Seasons mixes begonias and brushstrokes at its Florals and Fresh Paint event on April 30. The day includes an interactive floral arrangement workshop with Winston Flowers, a sneak peek at pieces in Copley Society of Art's Fresh Paint auction and some refreshments from the hotel. And to ensure nobody is tempted to cut some stems from the nearby Public Garden on their way home, participants can even keep the floral arrangements they create.

SINFUL SIP: Chuck Hitchcock says Dos Diablos will serve cocktails such as the Oaxaca Old-Fashioned.

DEVIL'S ADVOCATES

A DUAL CONCEPT COMES TO SYMPHONY

Two Saints Tavern and Dos Diablos
52 Goinsborough St., Boston (617- 236-8784) dosdioblostoqueria.com and twosaintstovern.com

Brian O'Donnell and Dropkick Murphys frontman Ken Casey have had a busy few years, renovating Lower Mills Tavern while opening Yellow Door Taqueria and Lion's Tail and also tending to McGreevy's. Now for their next project with partner Chuck Hitchcock, they're not content to open simply one restaurant—they're prepping a two-in-one spot. Dual concept Two Saints Tavern and Dos Diablos will combine the elements of a beer hall with a Mexican-inspired eatery when it opens in the Symphony neighborhood in May.

"We had a unique opportunity with this space to be able to do two different concepts with how it's split up," Hitchcock explains. "We wanted to have a little bit of a fun dive bar feel on one side for the kids and also provide something for the local residents and people who are looking for more of a restaurant."

Setting up shop in the former Our House East, the approachable, laidback atmosphere of the beer hall is expected to act as a stark contrast to the dark, elevated taqueria side, described by Hitchcock as having an "almost religious feel" with black chandeliers hanging from the ceiling and a stained glass motif behind the bar.

"It's kind of the cross between good and evil," Hitchcock says. "How do you want to go today? Do you want to be good and be on the beer hall side? Or do you want to get a little more risqué?"

Both sides will serve food and drinks seven days a week, with the beer hall opening at noon and Dos Diablos opening at 4 pm. The taqueria menu features sections for apps, ceviche and tacos like the pork carnitas made with crispy pork confit, queso chihuahua, salsa verde, black bean puree and crema. The cocktail menu will include libations like the Sparkling Cyanide, combining Beefeater gin, green Chartreuse, dry vermouth, Alessio blanco vermouth and a splash of sparkling rosé in a classic coupe. To accompany Two Saints' eight beers on tap, the menu will consist of small bites and bar food, with options like jumbo salted pretzels served with a choice of sauces and heartier fare like a chicken Parmesan panini.

Possessing a full entertainment license and capacity for 287 people—with seating for 58 in the taqueria and 18 in the beer hall—Hitchcock hopes this latest endeavor will serve sinners and saints alike.

"We're trying to create a fun atmosphere for the local clientele where they can come in and hang out in between classes, get a great dish of food or just sit down and have a great cocktail at the end of the day."

IT'S BANANAS! The [illegible] cream pie banana pudding is a riff on the classic dessert.

Good Eats: Top Banana

Dessert die-hards have a big reason to celebrate Manhattan-based Magnolia Bakery's first Massachusetts sweet spot in Faneuil Hall: the Boston cream pie banana pudding. For the Boston-exclusive dish, chief baking officer Bobbie Lloyd—who attended culinary school in Boston and opened her first restaurant in Brookline—taps the flavors of the Bay State-beloved dessert. "Instead of it being the cake with the pastry cream filling, it's more about the pudding and then the cookies create that cake-like texture," Lloyd says of the confection, which combines vanilla pudding, sliced banana, chocolate fudge and vanilla wafers. As the fudgy flavors of Boston cream pie hit you during the second bite, Lloyd says, "You'll have a moment where you'll go, 'Aha! I get it!' " / Nathan Tavares

YES TO PINOT

A recent pilgrimage to the annual Willamette Valley auction yielded several enticing expressions of the heartbreak grape. Charm, elegance, supple red cherry fruit and spice are among the signature characteristics that have made Oregon's wines so alluring. The region boasts a unique combination of weather and soil, with sunny summer days tempered by ultra-cool windy nights and generally dry conditions late into the growing season, while volcanic basalt, marine sediments and wind-blown silty clays impart concentrated fruit flavors. Beauty and style don't come cheap, but these artisan pinots are terrific values with three different aesthetics. / Sandy Block

STOLLER FAMILY ESTATE PINOT NOIR, DUNDEE HILLS, 2015

Notes of strawberry blossom, garden herbs and a whiff of tea leaf offer a taste of springtime. Willamette Valley in 2015 was something special, producing very sensual pinot noir. This one is supple and fleshy on the palate with a silkiness reminiscent of Volnay. It's also an ideal red-wine-with-fish choice and may be enjoyed a bit on the cool side.

$30, Common Vines, Downtown

REX HILL PINOT NOIR, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2014

Ripe and medium-bodied, this is a beautifully focused and savory pinot noir with wild cherry, cinnamon, red licorice and cocoa dust aromas. It's spicy but smooth as velvet and laden with dark bold raspberry flavors. This bottle tastes irresistible with grilled duck breast

$30, Bauer Wine, Back Bay

PONZI RESERVE PINOT NOIR, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2013

One of the pioneers of the Willamette Valley, Ponzi makes classic wines at all levels, but its old vine reserves are something special. Fragrant with floral and smoky nuances, the 2013 vintage features a mellow liqueur-like richness and intriguing notes of chocolate-covered cherries. This is a bottle to age further or linger over now with roasted meat dishes.

$50, Total Wine, Natick

Q&A
LEGENDS NEVER DIE

Patrick Renna starred as the insult-slinging Hamilton "Ham" Porter in The Sandlot—the 1993 film about baseball, a dog and mouth-to-mouth schemes—and will appear in the second season of Netflix's Glow this summer. The Boston native chatted about the fever pitch around the classic coming-of-age tale on its 25th anniversary. / Saroh Hogmon

HAM HAD QUITE THE MOUTH ON HIM, YELLING INSULTS LIKE, "IF MY DOG WAS AS UGLY AS YOU, I'D SHAVE HIS BUTT AND TELL HIM TO WALK BACKWARD." DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE LINE? Honestly, I think that might be it. When we filmed that scene, none of that was written and the director was behind the backstop with a bullhorn. Every time someone would come up to the plate he would yell an insult, and then I'd chuckle to myself and go, "Oh my God, you really want me to say that?"

I JUST CAME ACROSS A T-SHIRT WITH "YOU'RE KILLING ME SMALLS." Those shirts are kind of throughout. At the Mayweather-McGregor fight, Draymond Green was wearing the shirt, and it was just too much. Justin Turner on the Dodgers said he dressed up as me. It never ceases to amaze me.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE BASEBALL MOVIE? I would have to say Field of Dreams. That and A League of Their Own. When it came out, I was in Burbank. That was when Rosie O'Donnell was doing tons of movies before her talk show and so I literally fell in love with Rosie O'Donnell from that movie. And as I'm walking out of the theater, someone honks at me and it's Rosie O'Donnell. And she goes, "Hey, Sondlot! I love you!" I almost passed out.

AT THE END OF THE SANDLOT, HAM GOES ON TO A PROFESSIONAL WRESTLING CAREER. NOW, YOU'RE STARRING AS SUPERFAN CUPCAKE IN GLOW. What are the odds, right? I'm on a wrestling show with some glorious ladies so they can all just beat the crap out of me for saying, "You play ball like a girl." It's perfect. It all comes full circle.

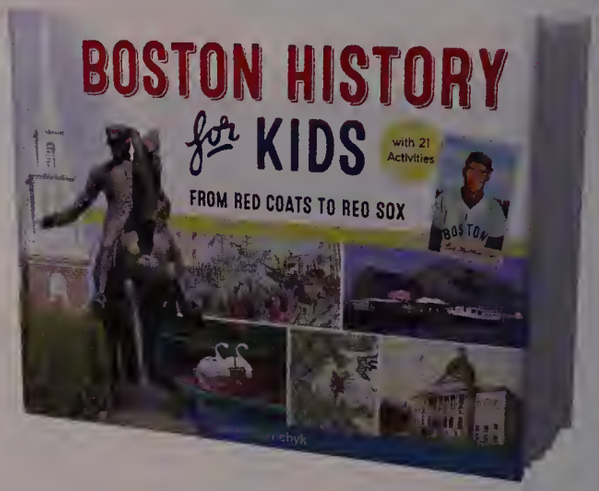
OLD IS NEW AGAIN



AN EDUCATIONAL TOME TACKLES BOSTON'S HISTORY IN AN INTERACTIVE WAY

Boston History for Kids: From Red Coats to Red Sox, with 21 Activities* by Richard Panchyk
Published by Chicago Review Press, 129 pages, $17

APPEALING TO ADULTS AS MUCH AS ITS target audience, Boston History for Kids excites with interesting facts about our city, originally named Botolphston. The children's dimension of the book involves making time capsules, a cardboard Big Dig-style tunnel or calculating home run percentages. Condensed, story-packed sections track Boston's inspiring rise with black-and-white illustrations of ships and battles, including the famous Boston Massacre in which half-black, half-Native American Crispus Attucks was killed by a soldier's musket—something that feels all too contemporary.

Former Gov. Michael Dukakis provides the book's foreword, challenging readers to think "about what you can do to make [the city] even better." Author Richard Panchyk then recounts many tales of folks who did just that. One Tea Party participant—splitting the tea chests with tomahawks—described the vivacious rebellion: "Let every man do his duty" and "keep his own secret and risk the consequences for himself." Paul Revere's famous ride warned residents of the ominous arrival of British troops; he also commemorated it in a delicate engraving. A legal battle with a wealthy captain over Mrs. Sherman's pig led, amazingly, to the modern form of our Congress with a House of Representatives and Senate.

Before the fire of 1872 burned 700 buildings, the very shape of Boston involved leveling Beacon Hill in 1760 to make wharves, while fill was used for much of the current city. The book also flows forward to Ted Williams, colorful Mayor Curley and the Kennedys, as Panchyk thrillingly captures our city's torments and heroism. Our ancestors certainly gave us a great deal.

FROM PAGE 29: "Anyone who engaged in a duel, even if nobody was actually injured, would upon conviction be 'carried publicly in a cart to the gallows, with a rope around his neck, and set on the gallows an hour, then to be imprisoned twelve months without bail.'" ◆

ETERNAL SPRING: The Paradisus Cancun recently renovated its adults-only wing.

Traveler's Checks

Take a day trip (or longer) just 8 miles off the Cancun coast to laidback Isla Mujeres, home to gorgeous beaches and world-class snorkeling.

Scuba divers should swim through MUSA, an underwater contemporary art museum filled with 500 submerged statues doubling as coral-growing sites.

BETTER WITH AGE

SWAP SPRING BREAK FOR SOMETHING MORE GROWN UP IN CANCUN

CANCUN AND SPRING BREAK ARE practically synonymous. You know it. Maybe you still have the ill-advised tribal tattoo or tramp stamp to show it.

You can't travel back in time to erase the tequila-fueled mistakes of undergrad years. But if you're looking to escape the unseasonably raw Boston weather, you might need a guide to a grownup-style spring escape to Cancun, where the water is warm, the cocktails frequently frozen and—if you make the right, responsible choices this time—a quick (four-hour flight), cost-effective (compared to similar destinations) and, yes, culturally enriching getaway awaits.

Before: You crammed your entire dorm floor into the cheapest hotel with a roof and an ocean view—if only that unadvertised dumpster wasn't in the way.

Now: You'll check in to the newly renovated "Royal Service"-level suites at Paradisus Cancun, where a $2.6-million overhaul in the 664-room resort's adults-only wing has yielded bright and airy accommodations with private balconies and Caribbean Sea vistas glimpsed even from the glass-enclosed showers. Besides Paradisus' existing all-inclusive amenities, Royal Service guests get extra goodies like a personal butler responsive to every WhatsApp-delivered request and an exclusive pool area with direct beach access and reservable Bali beds (equipped with cocktail-summoning buzzers) for catnaps in the shade.

Feel free to mix with the plebes spread throughout the property's five interconnected flora-filled pyramids. There's a casually upscale, frisky-but-refined vibe to even the more boisterous venues like Coco's beach bar, where afternoon DJs drop beats by lapping waves, and the bumping, nightlife-driven Red Lounge. Ultimately, though, you'll probably retreat (with new mate in tow) to the thinner crowds of Royal Service-only spaces like the atrium lounge—where tropical vines drip from six floors above an all-day complimentary bar and buffet—and the solo-time sanctuary of the Asian-inspired Yhi Spa that offers pampering body wraps and muscle-melting massages in bamboo treatment rooms bridged over calm koi ponds.

Before: You lived for a week by grazing all-you-can-eat taco bars with grade-F beef and drinking alcohol that'd be better suited for sanitizing shark bites.

Now: You'll take advantage of actually excellent all-inclusive dining at Paradisus' fab Fuego, a Latin fusion restaurant with a Nikkei (Peruvian-Japanese) edge and inventive ceviche options. And it's worth anteing up the extra cash for Tempo, a dining room from Michelin-starred chef Martin Berasategui, whose 10-course, wine-paired tasting menus offer Basque-inspired haute cuisine presented by white glove service. Elsewhere in the so-called Hotel Zone, find Lorenzillo's, a massive waterfront palapa famed for the many iterations of lobster that come from its farm.

If you decide to head downtown, cut through the overrun tourist traps and snag one of seven tables at the husband-and-wife run Du Mexique, intimate home to leisurely dinners of French-accented plates. And La Fonda del Zancudo is a particularly romantic option, an almost ruin-like, abandoned house-turned-restaurant. The outdoor garden is filled with greenery and strings of twinkling lights, a whimsical setting for a Mediterranean menu and creative cocktails.

Before: You slept until noon, never moved further than the beach and stocked up on culturally specific souvenirs like shot glasses with "Made in China" stamped on the bottom.

Now: You'll actually do some sightseeing. Chichen Itza is probably the most famous Mayan ruins site on the Yucatan peninsula, but you can hop on a trip with EKNX Tours to Tulum, where the remains of the coastal walled city reveal the Mayans' amazing early grasp of astronomy. Bring your bathing suit to clamber down the cliff side and take a dip in Instagram-worthy turquoise waters. You can also splash around in a cenote, a groundwater-filled limestone sinkhole used for cooling dips; ancient Mayans believed some cenotes led to the underworld and some EKNX tours visit with a practicing shaman for a pre-swim blessing. Another must-see is ancient city Coba, home to one of the few Mayan step pyramids that visitors can still climb—though bear in mind, you'll ascend 137 feet and 120 steeper-than-they-look, slippery stone steps with just the help of a single shared rope. After you take in the awesome jungle views, you'll probably want to crab-walk down on your butt. For more controlled adventure, stick to Parque Maya, a just-opened nature/adventure park with 1,500-feet of zip lines suspended 65 feet over a lagoon, plus six additional rope course challenges. ◆

GOOD AND PROPER

SOUTHERN PROPER TAKES THE LOW COUNTRY CHICKEN SHACK UPTOWN

YOU CAN TELL A LOT ABOUT A NEIGHBORHOOD by its newer restaurants. When a Seaport tower goes up, its first floor gets some national chain outlet that's soullessly indistinguishable from hundreds of convention-center-adjacent restaurants in Houston or Phoenix. By contrast, new South End buildings tend to be anchored by locally owned spots like Bar Mezzana and Area Four. Add newcomer Southern Proper to this list, in which chef/owner Jason Cheek (ex-Little Donkey, Coppa) showcases his native North Carolina's low country cuisine with fried chicken, barbecue, hushpuppies, grits and collards.

For starters, there's plenty of good drinking food to accompany a well-stocked full bar, including oversized, irresistible salt-and-vinegar pork rinds ($6) dusted with chili-cheese powder; creamy deviled eggs ($5) sprinkled with paprika and vinegar powder; and Silver Queen hushpuppies ($9), a steaming, crunchy rendition of the Southern corn fritter with hot-honey drizzled butter. Think of chicken wings or spareribs as you eat delectably fatty, crispy pig tails ($11) topped with a creamy pineapple-peanut dressing; it makes the notion of chewing around lots of little bones less ooky.

A slow smoker fueled with pecan wood produces some terrific barbecue, like housemade sausages ($9 each), including pretty mild hot link and a garlicky chicken sausage with some vegetal crunch. Smoked barbecue chicken ($16, half; $28, whole) is similarly juicy with its Worcestershire-darkened skin and vivid chow-chow (a sweet/sour cabbage relish). But the category's barn-burner is pulled pork ($14, half-pound; $26, pound): coarsely chopped, moist, with a delicate acid and chili-heat balance. It's really remarkable, and the version to beat in town. All BBQ comes with terrific house bread-and-butter pickles, pickled red onions, a nicely savory slaw and two peppy finishing sauces.

Vegetable plates are big enough to share, such as sweet potato/zucchini hoe cakes ($12) with chopped almonds and a big pour of cane syrup—a tall stack of thick, savory pancakes with a disappointingly dry, crumbly texture. They're a flop next to an iron skillet of charred okra ($15) and smoked cauliflower that's punched up with chow-chow and chili, in which uniform blackening gives the okra great flavor and firm texture, minimizing the goo that often repels Yankee diners—call it okra for okra haters.

Any would-be proud Southern kitchen has to show deep-fryer chops, and Southern Proper does not falter, producing spectacular fried chicken ($19, 4 pieces; $34, 8 pieces) with a medium-thick, crisp batter and mild or hot seasoning, the latter fierce but not face-melting. (You've hit an elusive target when your chicken breast is still moist.) Catfish and chips ($21) offers another able, thick-battered fry job of a big fillet, served with quality fried potatoes (like big steak fries), tartar sauce and lemons. Housemade hot sauces (red chili, green chili, pepper-seed vinegar and pineapple/habanero) add acid and heat to milder dishes. We took the staff tip to sprinkle the green one on catfish and it was spot-on.

Sides ($7 each) are crucial Southern signifiers, too, and Cheek's are uniformly fine: a pair of yeasty, Parker-House-like dinner rolls; excellently flaky, airy buttermilk biscuits; a thick-and-rich mac 'n' cheese; excellent, not-overdone collard greens; and grits and butter in which real fresh-corn flavor actually comes through. Still, $7 a whack can push a dinner tab from "Damn, such a value" to "Oh, right: This is still the South End."

Desserts include respectable ice cream ($7) served in an oversized cone or between biscuit halves and more on-point pies ($7, plus $2 for whipped cream or $3 for ice cream) with sweet little beauties like strawberry-rhubarb, chocolate and pecan. The bar adds another winning beverage program to the neighborhood, starting with a versatile beer list of nine drafts ($5-$9) and 10 packaged options ($8-$11). Macro lagers for pouring on top of 'cue and fried chicken? Check. Geeky sours and goses? Check, check. Cloudy, tart ciders? Yep. Pitchers? They do pitchers?! Yes, three of 'em ($16-$24). The solid list of wines by-the-glass includes a dozen choices ($10-$15) plus one on tap ($12). Specialty cocktails ($13) include a seasonal Collins (made with rainbow chard-infused gin on one visit) also available by the pitcher ($48). All one has to do to triangulate the witty, of-the-moment drinks sensibility here is to try something like the Unfun ($13) of applejack, rye, yellow Chartreuse and berry shrub.

The front-of-house staff is full of polished young pros that appear to be having a great time slinging this familiar, comforting menu. The room is pretty fresh-looking, too, cladding the now-familiar ground-floor new-construction aesthetic (soaring ceiling and windows, exposed rafters and ductwork) with the raw-plank bones of a tobacco-drying barn, then adding homey grandma's parlor bric-a-brac and dozens of quaint lamps. This place should be punishingly loud, but despite a peppy soundtrack ranging from Ray Charles to Gang of Four, noise levels stay comfortably conversational. Credit Cheek and his talented crew for holding the indie line against the ongoing mallification of Boston's restaurant scene. Southern Proper's idiom is hardly local, and while its prices don't exactly qualify it as a humble chicken shack, the food largely justifies them. As important, it has the vibe and the crowd of a real neighborhood joint, and these days, Boston simply cannot get enough of those. ◆

IN FULL BLOOM

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ The Genesis Foundation for Children held a benefit at the Boston Flower and Garden Show Preview Party on March 15 at the Seaport World Trade Center. The evening's 300 guests enjoyed drinks, dinner, floral displays and a raffle raising more than $30,000 for the charity's mission to diagnose and care for children born with physical, intellectual and genetic disorders.

➜ The third annual NMO Awareness Gala took over the Mandarin Oriental on March 24. Inspired by traditional Bollywood films, the gala benefitted the Sumaira Foundation for NMO, a charity founded in 2014 by Boston University alum Sumaira Ahmed after she was diagnosed with neuromyelitis optica. Two hundred guests enjoyed dancing, dinner and a raffle, raising $40,000 toward a study to use immune tolerance to prevent NMO attacks and retrain the immune system.

2. Tanjira Ahmed, financial manager at NASA Goddard Space Flight Center, and her sister Sumaira Ahmed, founder and executive director of the Sumaira Foundation for NMO

3. Melissa Herman, council curator at NationSwell, and Jason Barash, owner of Center Aisle Tickets

Q: I HAVE A DOUBLE CHIN, WHICH I HATE. I AM NOT OVERWEIGHT, I DIET, I EXERCISE AND NOTHING SEEMS TO HELP. ANY ADVICE?

A: Don't beat yourself up, double chins are hereditary; it is what it is. Men and women are equally affected. However, there are treatments to get rid of it to give you a nice jawline!

There are 3 ways to permanently remove the fat that causes double chins: liposuction, which is surgery; and CoolSculpting or Kybella, which are both non-invasive.

CoolSculpting is a treatment that freezes the fat cells to kill them. Kybella is an enzyme injection that destroys the fat cells. CoolSculpting and Kybella are both extremely safe and are very affordable. The fat cells are killed within minutes of the treatment, and then your body processes out all of the dead fat cells. You will see the final results, your new profile, in 6 to 8 weeks!

CINEMA CELEBRATION

THE CROWDS ARE READY FOR NEW ENGLAND'S FINEST FILM FESTIVAL

Avengers: Infinity War may be about to overtake cineplexes worldwide, but for movie lovers, the real action will be taking place at the Independent Film Festival Boston, the crown jewel of New England's many film fests, which kicks off its 16th year on April 25. Through the superheroic efforts of executive director Brian Tamm, program director Nancy Campbell and associate director Judy Wong, IFFBoston will present more than 100 films over 8 days, spread across greater Boston's independently owned and operated movie halls: Harvard Square's Brattle Theatre, Brookline's Coolidge Corner Theatre and Davis Square's Somerville Theatre. The latter will host the lion's share of the narrative and documentary features and shorts from the U.S. and across the world.

It's not just the films that make this festival something to celebrate, however. Tamm, Campbell and Wong—along with their amazing army of volunteers—have fostered a strong sense of community. Not only does IFFBoston connect audiences with visiting filmmakers and participants of many of the movies being screened, but the festival also encourages audience members to interact with each other, something that's reflected in this year's theme: "Find your crowd."

If the past 15 years are any indication, those crowds will be thick, so be sure to arrive early for each of the films in the lineup, beginning on April 25 with the New England premiere of Bo Burnham's comedy Eighth Grade (7:30 pm, Somerville Theatre). The Hamilton native's directorial debut focuses on a 13-year-old (Elsie Fisher, who voiced Agnes in the first two Despicable Me movies) who is attempting to survive her final week of middle school. Burnham and Fisher will introduce the film and answer questions at the conclusion of the festival's opening night selection.

On April 26, director Stephen Maing will attend the local premiere of Crime + Punishment (7 pm, Brattle Theatre), a documentary about a group of whistleblowers within the NYPD who expose the truth about illegal quota practices. Also that night, IFFBoston favorite Melanie Lynskey (who appeared in a whopping three films at last year's festival) plays the mother of a 13-year-old girl in the East Coast premiere of Megan Griffiths' Sadie (7:15 pm, Somerville). That drama focuses on a teen (Sophia Mitri Schloss) who attempts to push her mom's new boyfriend (John Gallagher Jr.) out of the picture. A more delicate family drama brews in the Boston premiere of Silas Howard's A Kid Like Jake (7:30 pm, Somerville), which tells the story of a Brooklyn couple (Claire Danes and Jim Parsons) and their 4-year-old son (Leo James Davis) who shows more interest in fairy tale princesses than toy cars. Oscar winner Octavia Spencer and Holyoke native Ann Dowd also star.

On April 27, Cambridge native and festival alum Debra Granik (winner of IFFBoston's Audience Award and Special Jury Prize for 2010's Winter's Bone) returns home to present and discuss her new drama, Leave No Trace (7 pm, Brattle), in which she trains her camera on the small mistake that forever changes the lives of the trailer park existence of a man (Ben Foster) and his—yes—13-year-old daughter (Thomasin McKenzie). On that same night, the centerpiece documentary spotlight shines on the East Coast premiere of Dan Habib's Intelligent Lives (7:30 pm, Somerville), which tells the stories of three young adults with intellectual disabilities. Habib will attend, along with Kingston-based producers Marianne Leone Cooper and Chris Cooper, the Oscar-winning actor who doubles as the film's narrator.

April 28 begins with the second annual Student Shorts Showcase (1 pm, Somerville), which screens short films selected by and representing local colleges. Later that day, Support the Girls (7 pm, Brattle), the newest comedy from festival veteran and former Bostonian Andrew Bujalski (writer/director of 2013's Computer Chess and 2015's Results), presents one long, strange day at a "sports bar with curves," starring Regina Hall and Haley Lu Richardson. That day also includes the East Coast premiere of the Boston-made documentary Dawnland (7:30 pm, Somerville), which tells a story of stolen children and cultural survival inside the first truth and reconciliation commission for Native Americans, highlighted by a Q&A with directors Adam Mazo and Ben Pender-Cudlip and a live performance by composer Jennifer Kreisberg.

If the past 15 years are any indication, those crowds will be thick, so be sure to arrive early.

UNLUCKY EIGHT: Bo Burnham's Eighth Grade focuses on a 13-year-old trying to survive middle school.

INDEPENDENT FILM FESTIVAL BOSTON runs April 25–May 2 at the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square, the Brattle Theatre in Harvard Square and the Coolidge Corner Theatre in Brookline. For complete details, visit iffboston.org.

On April 29, MassArt's Chico Colvard (winner of IFFBoston's Best Documentary Audience Award for 2010's Family Affair) and producer Madison O'Leary present Black Memorabilia (2:15 pm, Somerville), which opens a dialogue about racism in America by examining the material culture of certain artifacts. Also on that day, local directors Ann S. Kim and Priya Giri Desai discuss Lovesick (2:45 pm, Somerville), their compassionate portrait of Dr. Suniti Solomon, who works as a matchmaker for HIV-positive patients in India, where AIDS is discussed in hushed tones. In the evening, Paul Schrader holds a Q&A after a screening of his First Reformed (6 pm, Somerville), which focuses on a pastor (Ethan Hawke), his pregnant wife (Amanda Seyfried) and their soul-shaking encounter with an unstable environmental activist. The centerpiece narrative spotlight that evening is on another New England premiere with Carlos Lopez Estrada's Blindspotting (7:30 pm, Somerville), a timely and entertaining look at race and class in the gentrifying Oakland, starring longtime friends and cowriters Daveed Diggs and Rafael Casal, who will both be on hand.

Another IFFBoston veteran returns on April 30 as Lauren Greenfield (director of 2012's closing night film, The Queen of Versailles) presents her new documentary, Generation Wealth (7 pm, Brattle). At the same time, the New England premiere of Hearts Beat Loud (7 pm, Somerville) will likely make some noise in Davis Square as Nick Offerman and Kiersey Clemons play a father and daughter that team up as an unlikely songwriting duo in the latest drama from director Brett Haley, whose The Hero was a standout at last year's fest.

On May 1, IFFBoston moves across the river for its penultimate night of screenings in Coolidge Corner. First is Disobedience (7 pm), a drama from Oscar-winning director Sebastian Lelio that stars Rachel McAdams and Rachel Weisz as childhood friends involved in a forbidden relationship. But the romance doesn't end there as Damsel (9:30) tells the period tale of a pioneer (Robert Pattinson) and his treacherous journey across the American frontier to marry the love of his life (Mia Wasikowska). David and Nathan Zellner—who made a splash at the festival with 2012's Kid-Thing and 2014's Kumiko, the Treasure Hunter—write and direct.

And for those treasure hunters in the audience, the closing night selection, Won't You Be My Neighbor? (7:30 pm, Coolidge Corner), promises to be a real gem. Directed by Morgan Neville (Oscar winner for 20 Feet from Stardom), this emotional portrait of late children's TV host Fred Rogers challenges us to confront whether we've lived up to the ideal he set for us—or forgotten the simple pleasures of putting on our sweaters and lacing up our shoes. So settle in with your neighbors and discover the answer with your IFFBoston crowd. ◆

STURDY STALKS

NEW YORK TRIO MIXES DREAMY POP AND PUNKY VERVE WITH GROWING PROWESS

Twentytwo in Blue conveys a hue that speaks to Sunflower Bean's youth. The title of the fast-sprouting Brooklyn trio's sophomore album references both the age of the band members—all 22—as well as a color that drummer Jacob Faber says he associates with "resilience like the sky and ocean" rather than a melancholy tone.

"We were worried that people might think it's a sad record," adds singer/bassist Julia Cumming. "And then we thought that it also had this other side that was more hopeful and expansive." As for being 22, she offers, "You're not a child, but you still have your whole life ahead of you. And you know there's so much you need to learn, but you're starting to understand the strength or resilience you have within you."

It's not like the members of Sunflower Bean are entirely new to this rock thing. Cumming played in her first band at age 14, when she teamed up with Manhattan childhood friend and family-band veteran Rachel Trachtenburg in the psych-pop combo Supercute! Long Island natives Faber and guitarist/singer Nick Kivlen were in bands by age 16 and Kivlen knew Cumming from shows in New York.

"It almost seems inevitable for us to become friends because we were outliers in this world of 20- and 30-year-olds," Cumming says. "We were those kids that everyone was friends with and let us hang around and be part of the scene."

Launching Sunflower Bean in 2013, they were influenced by Down Under psych-rockers Tame Impala and Unknown Mortal Orchestra, whose bassist Jake Portrait co-produced the new album with Matt Molnar of the Brooklyn band Friends.

"If there's no risk, there's no experimentation and it's just the past. If rock wants to survive, it can't just be the past."

Molnar previously helped Sunflower Bean record its 2016 full-length debut, Human Ceremony, around mostly guitar-driven jams.

Yet Twentytwo in Blue highlights the group's maturity, built around better songwriting as well as pop-conscious yet experimental layering. The March release ranges from the T. Rex-like stomp of past-dashing opener "Burn It" to the ethereal post-shoegaze balladry of "Only a Moment," with Cumming emerging throughout as a more prominent, versatile singer. "I Was a Fool" even evokes Fleetwood Mac in its melodic turns as well as the vocal dynamic between Kivlen and Cumming, who flies high with dreamy Stevie Nicks-like harmonies.

Cumming acknowledges the band was drawn to Fleetwood Mac's 1979 opus Tusk for its experimental spirit. "It kind of gave us strength production-wise to think we should take risks," she says. "If there's no risk, there's no experimentation and it's just the past. If rock wants to survive, it can't just be the past."

In marked contrast—and clearly in the present—is "Crisis Fest," a pointed tune that targets the Trump-era with lines like "Reality's one big sick show" and "Every day's a missile test." Kivlen ties it to the fear, anxiety and lack of opportunities facing young people, who are starting to make their voices heard. "Our entire generation is not in tune with the people who are controlling this country," Kivlen says. "For the most part, they're extremely rich, extremely white Christian men. It doesn't match up with the makeup of this country. The country is changing more rapidly than ever, and I think eventually the powers that govern this country will have to reckon with that."

Yet the album's edgier, topical moments are outweighed by a largely sunny, enveloping disposition. Cumming says the band wanted to avoid making disposable music but also create an album that's "lovable" for listeners. "The important thing is not what the press says or how much it sells," she says. "It's that it actually gets to people and makes them feel something."

That should carry through to the group's live shows. The hard-touring trio—which returns to the Middle East to headline Sonia over English punk upstarts Dream Wife on May 3—strips back the layers for a sparse web where Cumming's melodic bass can fill spaces as much as Kivlen's guitar. And eventually it'll be back to the studio.

"I'm interested to see who we'll be on the other side," Cumming says. "We have to rebel to keep things interesting, to learn from it and grow and see what we can do next." ◆

CROSSING HAIRS

STUCK IN THE THICK OF IT WHILE TRYING TO GROW A BEARD

I DON'T KNOW HOW YOU DO IT, BEARD GUYS. I'm only on my third week and I can barely stand the alien face fungus overtaking my chin, jaw and upper lip. Notice I didn't say cheeks, because my beard is apparently scared to venture north of the 15th parallel. It turns out I have a natural chin-strap situation, also known as "douche beard," which means that I look like K-Fed or Turtle from Entourage. Worse, actually—I look like somebody who's trying to look like K-Fed or Turtle. And yes, those are dated references, but that's because nobody grows a beard like this anymore. Not intentionally, anyway. All I can hope is that it'll get better once I move past the, "Missing hiker found near Tuckerman's Ravine" stage of the beard game.

Like many beards, this one started by accident. My wife, Heather, was away for a week, and I decided, as one does, to revel in manginess. I skipped shaving for a couple of days. Then a couple more. I think my razor-avoidance record is five days, so I decided to let it ride and see what happened. And what happened is: not much. I'm not one of those guys who can start growing a mustache on Oct. 29 to get ready for a Super Mario costume on Halloween. In fact, one time I tried growing a mustache for two weeks and nobody noticed. At one point, my friend Dave and I were on the T and I thought he was eyeing my hilarious mustache, but instead he was preparing a comment on a zit that happened to be dead center on the back on my neck. "Hey dude," he said, "Is that where you got unplugged from the Matrix?" The mustache went unnoticed. By everyone.

But I've stuck with this beard long enough that it's starting to get some attention. My friend Louis said, "Very Duck Dynasty," which tells me that he definitely never watched Duck Dynasty and also that we need some more contemporary celebrity beard references, since cultural anthropologists will place that show squarely in the Honey Boo Boo era.

In any case, my facial follicles are venturing into uncharted territory and they're a ragtag bunch. If they were a band, they'd be the Skanky Tendrils. If they were a Robin Williams movie, they'd be Patchy Adams. And I waited so long to try to grow a beard that there's a smattering of gray hairs mixed in with the predominant red. It's a nice color palette for flannel, not a face.

Besides the aesthetic considerations, the beard is causing non-stop OCD chin-touching. I keep putting my hand to my face like, "What's this? Who am I? Did I just wake from a coma?" The beard—which I'm now noticing that I resist referring to as "my beard"—is a wellspring of low-level body dysmorphia. I'm not a guy with a beard and never have been. And yet, there it is! Somebody fetch me my Blanton's anti-dysmorphia elixir to help reconcile this strange reality.

Initially, I figured that growing a beard would curtail my grooming regimen. After all, shaving is tedious, and I tend to rush the job and end up looking like I got in a fight with an angry marmot. But as the face-hair grew out, I began to wonder if I needed to do anything besides shave my neck. In the shower, I started shampooing the beard while I was washing my hair. Is that what beard guys do? I have no idea, but it seems like you should wash this thing somehow, and my trusty two-in-one shampoo and conditioner did seem to make it softer. For real pro advice, I turned to my friend Murph, owner of a lush beard that he's cultivated continuously for five years. If you saw a black-and-white photo of Murph, you'd think he was a respected 19th-century apothecary named Amos Snead. That's how good his beard is.

"Shave your neck every other day," Murph advised. "Don't shave your cheeks unless you have to. Let your barber trim it, because you'll eff it up. And comb it after all scrubbings." Is this a beard or a champion lhasa apso? I thought the whole point of a beard was to cut down on personal grooming. At least, that's what my friend Hobo Jack told me while we were cooking beans down by the train yard.

I guess I haven't reached the point where I need a beard comb, assuming there is such a device. And I'm not sure I'll make it that far. Among all the other unhappy revelations produced by this experiment, I apparently have very sensitive follicles. When I work out, I can somehow detect individual beads of sweat on individual follicles. Are these hairs or antennae? Either way: gross.

Ultimately, the fate of the beard is up to one person and one person alone: Heather. And so far, she likes it. Which surprises me, but maybe she has a lumberjack fetish or is thinking about developing one. Still, eventually it'll be time to abandon the sketchy Federline fuzz and stop looking like a washed-up D-lister. I'll dust off my Gillette and go back to being clean-shaven and sophisticated. Like The Situation. ◆

As the face-hair grew out, I began to wonder if I needed to do anything besides shave my neck.

Soroff On / Julia Jones

WESTWORLD BOUND

THE SCI-FI DARLING DISHES ON TWILIGHT, MODELING AND DINNERS WITH ADAM SANDLER

BOSTON NATIVE JULIA JONES, 37, BEGAN STUDYING with Boston Ballet at age 4 and graduated from Boston Latin before earning a degree in English from Columbia University. She modeled in college, appearing in campaigns for Levi's, Esprit and Polo Ralph Lauren, which she quickly parlayed into her objective: an acting career. Best known as Leah Clearwater in the blockbuster film adaptations of the Twilight series, Jones has appeared in Jonah Hex, Wind River and The Ridiculous 6, and she currently has three films in post-production. On television, she has appeared on ER and Longmire, and is set to play Kohana in season two of the wildly popular series Westworld. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So is Westworld the best show on TV?
JULIA JONES: Well, the experience of being a part of it, the cast and the creators and the crew—everybody involved with it feels the same way. I think that's the root of it. It's a highlight of my life, one of the best, most fun jobs I've ever had. It's super challenging, and I think we're tapping into something larger than us.

Ever get sick of being Leah Clearwater? I have in the past but not anymore. It's a funny thing because I feel like she's sort of preserved by a bunch of strangers and fans. She doesn't feel like me anymore. There's a separation in my brain, so now it's just purely lovely to be this character that people care about.

Do you do Comic Con or any of those conventions? I don't do them anymore, but I did for a while. Those are intense.

Any bizarre stories? Yeah, so many. But more of them are really heartwarming. The most memorable aren't the weirdest. People get so excited that they kind of lose their minds a little sometimes. You just never know what to expect in those situations.

Favorite thing that you've been in? I'm going to say Westworld, but it's impossible to choose. They're all so different. The Ridiculous 6 is so funny and absurd, and Wind River is such a beautiful film and nothing can touch that. But right now, I'm just so excited to see the next season of Westworld and I can't believe I'm a part of it. I didn't know what I was getting into and I just lucked out so big-time.

Most fun set you've ever been on? Hands down, Ridiculous 6. Three quarters of the cast were from the most exciting years of SNL. It was incredible. It was bananas every day. I'd never done a comedy before and I was literally on the floor the whole time. Also, Adam Sandler takes really good care of everybody, so we had dinner together every night. Ten to 15 of us had dinner together every night like a family.

Actor or director you're dying to work with? That list is endless, but the first person who comes to mind is Guillermo del Toro.

How much of your acting is informed by your training in ballet? More than I'm aware of. I think every technical aspect of a performance comes from my ballet training. The ability to master that to the point where it's something that's happening subconsciously is a huge part of the ability to be free and act well.

How do you mean? Well, even with language stuff. Languages and dialects are more familiar because I was trained using French words, dancing to Italian or German music. I started ballet when I was 4 and I feel like there are pathways in my brain for technical memorization of things, whether they're physical or intellectual. And for sure, the discipline of it.

When you were modeling, did you feel objectified or perceived as stupid because you were so beautiful? Well, kind of the opposite, which is interesting. But let me just be clear: I felt extremely objectified by modeling. [Laughs.] But I kind of felt like a spy, which was really fun for me. No one thought of me as a sentient being so I got to listen to so much stuff and see so many things. I was working with really phenomenal artists a lot of the time and traveling all over the world. I was a sponge. So it was a liberating and empowering thing, plus I was making money, which gives you independence. But there were prices to pay.

Biggest beauty secret? Personally? Less is more. I use pure castile soap. I've tried a lot of different potions and concoctions, and for me, I like the basics.

Anyone in Hollywood you get mistaken for? There aren't that many people who look like me, but the person who people might confuse me with is Q'orianka Kilcher, who played Pocahontas in The New World.

Anyone you'd like to be compared to? Well, Lisa Joy, the co-creator of Westworld. I've heard from a lot of people that I reminded them of her, and having gotten to know her a little bit, I'm very flattered. Truly the greatest compliment on every level. She went to Harvard Law School. She's no joke.

Is working for Quentin Tarantino the most intense experience an actor can have? It's also bananas, because it's all about the people who congregate around different circuses. The people Quentin Tarantino has under his tent are a genre of their own. The guys in that circus have hearts of gold, but they are just wild.

Ever work with someone you never want to work with again? That's a good question. It's hard because you're serving a story and sometimes the idea that it's an important story to tell overrides any personal likes or dislikes you might have. You try to insulate yourself from them and tell the story because you feel the story shouldn't be punished. That said, yes, there are people that I cannot imagine working with every day.

Most harrowing part of filming Angelique's Isle? [Laughs.] I don't even know where to start. I guess I would say attempting to eat a frozen rabbit. There are so many gnarly scenes in there, really challenging things, but that's the only time I had to say after a couple of takes, "I don't have another one in me." I was feeling so sick.

Worst job you ever had? I did a bikini ad on the Hudson River in December and I got hypothermia. That was pretty bad. [Laughs.]

Ultimately, film or TV? Hard to say now. I would have said film up until a couple of years ago, but a limited series on TV is 10 amazing one-hour films. They're really bleeding into each other. And I would even say that I like the format of a limited series more because you have so much more time with character development. ◆

"I'm just so excited to see the next season of Westworld and I can't believe I'm a part of it. I didn't know what I was getting into."

OWNERS OF VINTAGE AND CONSIGNMENT SHOPS ACROSS BOSTON HAVE THEIR OWN TASTE—OFTEN FAR REMOVED FROM RUNWAY STYLES. WE TAPPED A FEW OF THEM TO UPDATE A FAVORITE OLD PHOTO WITH SOMETHING THEY MIGHT WEAR TODAY. THE RESULTS WERE PICTURE PERFECT.

"I like to wear something classic with a pop," says Pease, who shows off a photo from an art museum visit. "My personal style is definitely everything to the max."

Pease picks this crimson blazer to add a little vibrancy to a classic ensemble.

This '50s velvet-lined clutch is meant to mix elegance—and a touch of sparkle—with practicality. Bonus: It's got enough space to hold an iPhone.

These black wide-leg pants are a staple piece for Pease.

Nestled in a Harvard Square courtyard, Oona's Vintage and Modern has served as a wonderland of candy-colored garments and playful accessories for more than 45 years. A longtime vintage clothing collector, Marianna Pease took over the store's operations in 2016 and has filled it with fun dresses and accessories such as gloves, sunglasses and hats.

OF SWAPIT

Johnson opted to recreate an outfit from an event honoring her grandfather in the early '90s. "Growing up, I struggled heavily with my look and wanted to do something about it," she says. "So I created my own way to up my style game."

This jean jacket updates Johnson's favorite '90s jean vest, which also featured a black velvet trim.

Johnson adds this striped sweater over the dress to provide a classic touch to the outfit.

Johnson swaps out the floral print skirt for this geometric pattern dress given to her by her late father.

Stefanie Johnson—co-founder of SwapIt—is always helping customers reinvent their style, refreshing women's closets with updated items. Soon after launching the online SwapIt service, she opened the sec-ondhand storefront this spring in Davis Square, offering racks of clothes and a personal stylist for shoppers who can swap out pieces they don't want anymore. But don't worry if you're averse to visiting the store—Johnson and team will still be making house calls.

"I used to throw dance parties and wear allover print everything and just looked obnoxious as fuck," Marcelino says of this photo, which features him in a glittery silver metallic Dolce & Gabbana sweater.

Inspired by the vintage scarf in the photo, Marcelino chooses this Gucci scarf that says "Love is blind" in Italian.

Marcelino infuses the new outfit with a modern streetwear vibe, from a Supreme hat to these custom print joggers from RageOn.com.

Eric Marcelino has always had an eye for high fashion and he's been putting that wisdom to work since he founded the online consignment boutique Luxury Resale Network with his sister Andrea in 2013. Headquartered in Boston, the business taps into buyers across the world and boasts faster sales and higher prices for your product because of the website's wider reach. But it's not all business for Marcelino, who always aims to mix his sense of humor with his sense of fashion.

Never one to shy away from color, Marcelino picks this pair of custom print Nikes to add a punch of cobalt.

Hthaiwon Layne & Kate Marx OF SWIFT & FAIRE

Hthaiwon Layne and Kate Marx first met a decade ago while working at a digital agency in Boston, but they bonded over something far more analog: vintage clothing. The pair soon started a vintage clothing business, Swift & Faire, which is just one of the vendors inside their new multi-vendor collective. Opened in 2017 and recently relocated to West Broadway in Southie, Recollective Vintage features men's and women's threads as well as home furnishings. "Everything is vintage, not thrift or consignment," says Marx, who along with Layne still works at a digital agency during the day. "This is shoe money," cracks Layne. Well, vintage shoe money.

The pair's first pop-up for Swift & Faire was at T.T. the Bear's Rockin' Holiday Flea Market in this 2010 photo. "The pop-up's now at ONCE in Somerville," Marx says. "We've kind of grown up a little bit since then, but we still participate because it's a fun event." Here, Layne and Marx are both rocking their signature styles. With a minimalist feel, Layne wears a '70s denim pearl-snap shirt with '80s black suede booties and a '50s rhinestone necklace. Marx shows off her Boho-glam look with an '80s off-the-shoulder sequin-embellished top and '70s Cuban booties.

Preferring natural fibers, Layne opts for this chambray denim shirt and a pair of vintage Levi's.

This '80s peacock-inspired sequin jacket is Marx's go-to cape for concerts—when she can really spice things up. "I'm keeping it glam on the streets of Boston," she says with a smile.

It was true then and it's true now: Black skinny jeans are a staple in Marx's closet.

These '80s patent mules can be dressed up or dressed down and keep in line with Layne's minimalist taste.

hanadi hamzeh OF COVET

"I tried to update the look and take a more mature spin on it. My initial thought was to replace the headband with a neck scarf because the headband looked a little too cutesy for me. But I decided a hat felt more 'now.' This one is handmade—I recently purchased it on a trip to Cape Town."

"This ASOS top was actually an off-the-shoulder one similar to the photo. Though that style is 'in,' it felt a little too trendy and I didn't want to translate the outfit too literally, so I cut off the sleeves to make it strapless, which I thought was more fun."

"I tied this scarf around my wrist to add some color to the outfit. It's from Moschino, but it's a very Versace print."

"A crop top and shorts is a little too much skin for a 31-year-old. I love high-wasted everything, so I went with this cropped wide leg by DL 1961, which I think is a fresh take on jeans for summer."

After leaving behind a gig at Mass. General Hospital, Hanadi Hamzeh opened her South Boston consignment shop Covet in 2013. She's since relocated to bigger digs at 391 W. Broadway, packed with even more inventory from brands such as Chloe, Isabel Marant and Diane von Furstenberg. When it comes to filling her own closet (including the items here), Hanadi says, "Other than white crewneck tees, almost everything I own I get from Covet or other consignment shops." Some extra good news for bargain hunters: "I'm currently scouting spots for a second location."

"This outfit is from around 1990, when I was about 3 or 4. I believe it's from Limited Too—that was clearly the beginning of my love for crop tops. I wish I could see what shoes my mom put on me!"

skin DEEP

By Jonathan Soroff
Photographed by Holly Rike

Madam C.J. Walker is an unfamiliar name to most Americans, but she is often identified as the first black female millionaire in the United States. She amassed her fortune in the early-20th century by selling her own hair and beauty line after a scalp ailment that was likely related to the harsh chemicals in conventional products led Walker to formulate her own.

As the French would say: "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." »

Today, issues of race and gender are at the forefront of our national discourse, and two women of color in Boston—a place with a complex history on racial matters—have emerged as successful entrepreneurs and leaders in the city's beauty industry. Gianne Doherty, who co-founded Organic Bath Co., and Charla Jones, who founded natural skin care line eu2be, both rely on natural botanical ingredients in their products—a tradition that's deeply ingrained in black culture and one that just so happens to be taking off in mainstream beauty circles right now. It's a coincidence they both hope to capitalize on, shedding the perception that skin color should be the overriding factor in how you choose your beauty products.

"Black women have always known how effective natural oils are," Jones says. "We've been using them for generations."

Doherty recalls her mother taking aloe from her garden to soothe her skin. "I grew up knowing the power of plants," she says.

There's a rich, centuries-old tradition among black women to carefully moisturize and protect their skin. As Jones puts it, "When dark skin is dry, it looks ashen, and black women have always sought to avoid that." So what Jones and Doherty are doing is not much different than what their ancestors did—but now they're bringing it into the retail space.

GIANNE DOHERTY

Jones was born and raised in Ohio, where her maternal grandmother ran a speakeasy that hosted jazz and blues greats like B.B. King. Her aunt Eugenia, for whom she named her company, was a seminal influence. A glamorous world traveler, she instilled in Jones the importance of looking after her skin. "My aunt loved the old Kiehl's products. They had a scent that she adored," she says. "So I used them, too, until Kiehl's went mass market and they changed the formula."

After a successful career in digital marketing, Jones established her brand in 2014, seeking the help of a chemist to formulate products that employ a combination of natural oils and a naturally derived preservative to prolong the products' shelf life.

"Skin is a living, breathing organ," she says. "It's different every day. With my products, we start with a cleanser that doesn't deplete skin of its natural moisture, and then we move on to lotion, which hydrates the skin, and oil, which protects it. I'm very particular about the types of oils I use, like sunflower seed and apricot, because no one wants to feel greasy."

Many of Jones' botanicals such as babassu, tamanu and nangai are sourced from Brazil with the hope that they can deliver long-lasting results. "Anything can make your skin look and feel good for 20 minutes. The goal is for it to last. There are up to 40 layers of flattened skin cells that make up your first layer of defense, and the goal is to penetrate them."

As for her products' fragrance, Jones once again pays homage to her aunt Eugenia, who arrived home from a trip to Paris with a bottle of Jean Patou 1000 and immediately declared it the "family scent." For eu2be, Jones has formulated a subtle, unisex fragrance as a tribute to Patou, with top-notes of sandalwood, cedarwood and wild fig.

"My customers are very thoughtful and considered," she says. "They read the label and see that it's a much more substantial product. I see beauty as a creative force that we can tap into daily to empower a sense of wellbeing."

Gianne Doherty was inspired to start Organic Bath Co. when her old standby product began irritating her skin. Growing up the daughter of a U.S. diplomat, she lived all over the world, but one constant was that her mother, a native of Belize, never failed to moisturize head to toe.

"My mom was always putting shea butter or oil directly onto her skin, and she used aloe for everything," Doherty recalls. When she became an adult, Doherty began using the luxury line La Mer.

"I bought into the whole La Mer story, but then my skin started reacting to the fragrance and other ingredients. I started getting hives."

After a successful career in staffing, she moved to Boston from New York in 2012 and with her partner, Jay Weeks, co-founded Organic Bath Co. to provide a cleaner, more natural alternative to the beauty products on the market.

"Women of color in general are marketed more toxic beauty products, from things like hair straighteners and skin-whitening cream," she notes, citing a study by the Environmental Working Group. Echoing a sentiment expressed by Jones, Doherty suggests that black women also spend more than white women on beauty products and skin creams. "I want all women to be healthier, but I do feel a responsibility to communicate the toxic aspects of beauty products, especially to women of color."

Following that edict, Organic Bath Co. sources many of its natural ingredients carefully. Its shea butter comes from Ghana, a country where Doherty lived for a time as a kid. "It's one of the most emollient, healing ingredients. It turns out my mom was right!"

As for operating as minority women in a notoriously cutthroat and competitive industry, Doherty and Jones say that being an entrepreneur is difficult no matter what, making it impossible to separate out what challenges and difficulties they've faced because of their race or gender. Both also agree that they don't see a lot of black women represented within the beauty industry.

"I'm operating on the Martin Luther King Jr. idea of judging people by the content of their character, not the color of their skin, but it sometimes feels like this industry is still operating in the Jim Crow South," Jones says. "The problem is that the moment you voice that, you get put in the 'Angry Black Woman' category."

Major beauty giants risk alienating black women at their own peril, as two recent incidents illustrate. Last year, SheaMoisture, an international brand that's nearly a century old and is supported primarily by black women, stirred up controversy by "whitewashing" an ad campaign. The company—which was formerly black-owned but is now part of Unilever—said that it was trying to grow its customer base regardless of skin color. Dove, meanwhile, was forced to publicly apologize last year for an ad that was widely considered offensively racist. While those instances show just how far the beauty industry has to go in terms of inclusiveness and diversity, Jones takes a more sanguine attitude.

"They may have messed up," she says, "but at least they're trying to address these issues."

It's the same issues Madam C.J. Walker tried to address after amassing her fortune a century ago. She became a noted philanthropist, donating large sums of money to causes that fought for racial and gender parity, and her estate, Villa Lewaro, in Irvington, New York, was frequented by luminaries such as W.E.B. Du Bois, Zora Neale Hurston and Langston Hughes, and is now protected by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Jones and Doherty aren't quite at Walker's level yet, but they're both doing their part to make sure the beauty industry broadens its horizons.

"I see beauty as a creative force that we can tap into daily to empower a sense of wellbeing."

"If a brand or retailer is not showcasing diversity in their media images, in the staff they hire, their advisory boards—then they just aren't making enough effort," Doherty says. "Women of color need to be embraced and included in all areas of clean beauty. It's something that we are trying to focus on and make a conscious effort to change." ■

MOVIES

BLOCKERS ★★★ While it might not bear his name, Judd Apatow's fingerprints are all over this comedy, which counts his wife (Leslie Mann) among its stars and Superbad scribes Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg among its producers. Hell, it'd be easy to dismiss this mix of budding sexuality and old-fashioned sentimentality as a female version of that 2007 hit about horny high school seniors, were it not for the affable performances that director Kay Cannon has gotten out of her game cast. That's right, Blockers is actually directed by a woman (edited by one, too!), which is an extreme rarity in today's industry. And although the original script was penned by a pair of men (brothers Brian and Jim Kehoe), Cannon (the writer of Pitch Perfect and its two sequels, as well as a writer and producer on NBC's 30 Rock) clearly had a hand in the screenplay. But so did Rogen and Goldberg, which probably explains the reliance on raunch—and the drunken vomiting, too. Nevertheless, Cannon combats these genre prerequisites as best as she can, delivering a moderately well-balanced look at three girls (Kathryn Newton, Geraldine Viswanathan and Gideon Adlon) who've made a pact to lose their virginity on prom night. Then there's the girls' parents (Mann, John Cena and Ike Barinholtz) who will stop at nothing to cock block the boys (Graham Phillips, Miles Robbins and Jimmy Bellinger) who are selected to do the deeds. Unexpectedly, most of the characters come across with depth; none are outright idiots and each is given a moment to shine as the film reaches its sweet denouement. Reviews by Brett Michel & Edited by Cathryn Haight

CHAPPAQUIDDICK* ★★1/2 In July of 1969, while the American public was transfixed by the Apollo moon landing, a tragedy unfolded on Martha's Vineyard. Mary Jo Kopechne (House of Cards' Kate Mara), one of the late Bobby Kennedy's "boiler room girls," drowned while submerged inside a car that had been driven off a bridge by U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy (Australian actor Jason Clarke, looking, if not completely sounding, the part) after a late night of partying. Nearly 50 years later, there are still unanswered questions about what exactly happened in the aftermath. According to public record, the last son of Camelot fled the scene after he flipped his Oldsmobile into a pond on Chappaquiddick Island, not reporting the incident until 10 hours later. Was the young member of Ted's staff still alive when he took off, trapped to breathe her last gasps? First-time writers Taylor Allen and Andrew Logan speculate that's the case in their screenplay for journeyman director John Curran. In this fairly damning portrait, they stick to the popular narrative of the brother who was doomed to survive, never to become president because of his mysterious involvement in Kopechne's death. The film's account of a cover-up paints Ted as a flawed individual desperate to escape the shadow of his slain siblings, a man torn between taking the advice of his cousin, lawyer Joe Gargan (Ed Helms, strong in a non-comedic role)—who advises him to do right and resign—or continuing the family legacy. And like Ted, the film—though accomplished—never quite fulfills its early potential. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Seaport and in the suburbs.)

I Feel Pretty ★1/2 Screenwriting team Abby Kohn and Marc Silverstein dust off that old comedy trope of the traumatic head injury played for laughs in this hit-and-mostly-miss script they wrote for their co-directing debut. Filmed in and around Boston even though the movie's set in New York, you can at least distract yourself by trying to recognize some of the Beantown landmarks that inexplicably turn up in Manhattan. Perhaps it's the perfect metaphor for the identity crisis at the center of the story. Amy Schumer stars as Renee Bennett, an average woman who's crippled by low self-esteem. When she cracks her skull after falling from a stationary bike in spin class, she suddenly perceives that she's even more beautiful than supermodel Emily Ratajkowski, who plays another woman at SoulCycle. Instantly shedding her debilitating lack of confidence, she lands both her dream job and a boyfriend (comedian Rory Scovel), who's just as timid and self-conscious as she previously was. And while not many folks would consider a position as a receptionist to be the pinnacle of a career in fashion, Schumer really sells the transformation, especially during a scene set in a bar on "Coney Island" (i.e.: Salisbury Beach), where she enters a bikini contest. What could have been an embarrassing lowlight of the film instead turns into a comic triumph. Alas, it's a fleeting moment in a fairly unfunny film that conflates shallow beauty with success. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Lean on Pete ★★★1/2 You've likely heard this one before: A teen boy enamored with a beat-up horse begs the bronco's gruff old trainer to race the steed again, convinced that he's worth more than a spot in the glue factory. Director Andrew Haigh has likely heard this tale as well. But after his previous successes (2011's Weekend and 2015's 45 Years), the fact that he's taken this shopworn template into unexpected directions is hardly a surprise. Haigh's latest film, Lean on Pete, is a tremendous heartbreaker, unafraid to punch you in the gut with harsh reality while remaining open to the possibility of hope. Haigh adapted Willy Vlautin's beloved novel himself and the British filmmaker sticks to the Pacific Northwest setting of the book. All the Money in the World's Charlie Plummer is exceptional as Charley Thompson, a lonely 15-year-old who's been drifting from place to place with Ray, his single father (Australian actor Travis Fimmel). Ray's an immature man who tempts fate when he sleeps with a married woman, setting a chain of events in motion that finds Charley hitting the road as an assistant to Del Montgomery (Steve Buscemi, Plummer's co-star on HBO's Boardwalk Empire), owner of the titular horse. Although seasoned jockey Bonnie (Chloë Sevigny) stresses that the aging Pete's not a pet, Charley's in love with the animal—and about to learn some painful lessons. Every one of these characters has been dealt bad hands, but Haigh earns your tears with his unflinching naturalism and a respect for those living on the fringes. (At Kendall Square.)

A QUIET PLACE ★1/2 When a sci-fi horror picture is really hitting all its notes, you can hear the suspense working its way through the audience, with audible gasps breaking up the silence between genuine screams. Since it opened in 1979, Ridley Scott's Alien has remained the gold standard for the genre. Much of this is due to the slow buildup to the awaiting terrors, allowing us to gain empathy for each character and raising the stakes once the little-seen title creature begins stalking them in a tense and deadly game of cat and mouse. Few of these strengths are present in Newton native John Krasinski's A Quiet Place, a film the actor co-wrote, directed and stars in with his wife, Emily Blunt. With the Earth overrun by aliens who pounce with their deadly piercers when they hear you, you must remain quiet to survive. Essentially a tight-knit thriller about a family of four picking up the pieces after the fifth and youngest member broke the silent rule, the movie skips the slow-build, throwing us right into the thick of the alien threat. After Lee (Krasinski) and Evelyn (Blunt) lose their adorable little moppet Beau (Cade Woodward) during the film's prologue, the film jumps ahead a year to when they've regrouped with their surviving son and daughter, the timid Marcus (Wonder's Noah Jupe) and the deaf Regan (hearing-impaired actress Millicent Simmonds of Wonderstruck). Krasinski's no Spielberg when it comes to presenting clear geography, which also hurts the suspense. Meanwhile, the CG beasties fail to inspire much fear—a fact I could hear through the deafening silence that permeated my screening. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

RAMPAGE ★★1/2 Declaring this movie one of the better films derived from a video game is damning Brad Peyton's picture with faint praise. Unlike the recent Tomb Raider, it would appear that Rampage's four writers actually seemed to enjoy cooking up a juvenile story in this goofy-starring vehicle that allows the endlessly likable Dwayne Johnson to flex his muscles. The 1986 arcade title was little more than an excuse to grab a joystick and play as a cartoonish giant monster that leveled an endless succession of skyscrapers and fended off a military onslaught. It was great fun. Miraculously, the movie retains a similar visceral rush, even though you've been relegated to a passive role as an observer. Johnson plays an original character: Davis Okoye, a special-ops grunt-turned-primatologist, whose best friend is George, an albino gorilla he saved from poachers years earlier. George isn't a mindless King Kong clone like his arcade conterpart, however. Fluent in sign language that would make Jane Goodall blush, he enjoys flipping the bird at Davis and terrifying unsuspecting interns to amuse himself in the San Diego wildlife reserve where he lives. That is, until a diabolical plot causes him to grow exponentially, escape and then rage uncontrollably toward a destructive climax set in downtown Chicago that perfectly comprehends the core appeal of Rampage's classic arcade roots. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

READY PLAYER ONE ★★ While it's not exactly a bad movie, it's hard to fathom who Ready Player One will truly appeal to. Well, other than director Steven Spielberg. I probably spotted more of the film's visual and aural "Easter eggs" than most—since I've owned every video game console since the Magnavox Odyssey first hit stores in 1972. Couple that with the fact that I also grew up watching all of Spielberg's blockbusters, which informed the 2011 Ernest Cline book that serves as this cinematic sugar confection's loose inspiration. Still, I couldn't get through Cline's meta-novel, barely making it to page 50. TV's Family Guy already has the market cornered on pop culture references for references' sake, but simply recognizing something isn't enough to hold my interest. And Spielberg's movie is bursting with references to all things '80s (and beyond), which will have some geeks pausing through this picture frame by overstuffed frame when it hits video. But for now, you'll have to visit your local theater to try and get your jollies from this 2045-set nostalgia film, where 18-year-old Wade Watts (Tye Sheridan) dons a pair of virtual-reality goggles that make him resemble Cyclops, the character he plays in the X-Men movies. Set mostly within a gaudy VR world, with a plot out of Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory, there's either something here for everyone—or not enough for anyone. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Truth or Dare ★ You just know that Olivia Barron (Lucy Hale of Freeform's Pretty Little Liars) is a Good Person because the college senior is going to spend her final spring break volunteering for Habitat for Humanity. Then again, her best friend and roommate, Markie Cameron (Violett Beane of CW's The Flash), did mange to coax Olivia into abandoning her altruistic plans to head to Tijuana instead. What did it take to convince her? Perhaps it's the fact that Markie's boyfriend, Lucas (Tyler Posey of MTV's Teen Wolf), is also headed down to Mexico. Director Jeff Wadlow (Kick-Ass 2) sure does take every opportunity to point out that "sweet Olivia" secretly pines for the hunk, so maybe she deserves everything that's coming to her in the latest teen-friendly horror flick from Blumhouse Productions. First and foremost, what's coming is a feature-length game of truth or dare. This cursed rendition of the DIY game is run by a demon—I think. Unfortunately, the death-dealing rules of the game are such a muddle, it's surprising that most of the characters don't die sooner as punishment for not complying with the confusing directives. It'd be great to dare the filmmakers to tell the truth: Confess that this cheaply executed movie and its Snapchat-like visual effects is a half-assed rip-off of David Robert Mitchell's 2014 horror hit, It Follows. Teenagers have short attention spans, so maybe they won't notice. But if your attention span is just fine, you'll see the truth early on: This film's real horror stems from its tedium. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Unsane ★★★ Midway through Steven Soderbergh's new thriller, a Major Hollywood Star appears as a Boston security consultant who tells the film's heroine, Sawyer Valentini (Claire Foy), to "think of your cellphone as your enemy." Certainly, that's good advice for a woman who goes so far as to uproot from Boston, leaving her friends and family behind to make a fresh start in Pennsylvania after two years of being terrorized by a stalker. But for Soderbergh, his smartphone is his best friend, at least on this project, since he shot it almost entirely with iPhones. And while it sounds like a gimmick, this decision lends an in-your-face immediacy to the picture; the filmmaker has a grand time staging the tale in exquisitely framed, personal space-invading close-ups and claustrophobia-inducing angles that are easily facilitated by the small size of his unconventional choice of camera. Rather than looking cheap, the images capture a certain queasiness, as though you're witnessing something that you shouldn't, especially once Sawyer is duped into committing herself for 24 hours of evaluation inside a secluded psychiatric hospital. Convinced that the stalker she escaped is now posing as a staff nurse, she violently lashes out, which results in an extension of her involuntary stay. Is she actually being held against her will, trapped in a facility with a dangerous man, or is she suffering from psychosis? This is a welcome return to more voyeuristic territory from Soderbergh, who launched his career nearly three decades ago with Sex, Lies, and Videotape. (In the suburbs.)

You Were Never Really Here ★★★★ It's only April, but you might not see a better film this year than Lynne Ramsay's electrifying experiment with narrative form, her fourth in nearly two decades. The 48-year-old may not be as prolific as most of her peers, but between 1999's Ratcatcher, 2002's Morvern Callar, 2011's We Need to Talk About Kevin and this latest triumph—an adaptation of Jonathan Ames' novella about an Iraq war veteran who rescues teenaged runaways and girls forced into sexual slavery—the Glasgow-born writer/director never misses. If suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder is anything like the disorienting flashes of sound and image that have been linked together with off-putting electronic music and atonal string cues courtesy of Radiohead's Jonny Greenwood, it's a nightmare best not experienced personally. But in Ramsay's hands, it's impossible to avert your eyes and ears from the horrors of her nightmare noir. Playing a role for which he was awarded Best Actor at last year's Cannes Film Festival, Joaquin Phoenix stars as Joe, a disheveled Lazarus figure whose aimless existence is given new purpose after his latest rescue effort doesn't go as planned. You may not completely piece together the conspiracy that's unfolding in between flashes of Joe's tangled memories, but ultimately, it doesn't really matter. Ramsay's command of craft, disarming flashes of humor and sense of style infuse her man-on-a-mission mashup of John Boorman's Point Blank (1967) and Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver (1976) with a poetic grace that few artists achieve. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

What Are You Waiting For?

MUSIC

Edited by Nathan Tavares

SISTER ACT With the funky guitar twangs and staccato lyrics of their 2013 smash hit "The Wire," childhood rock-band dreams became vivid reality for Haim, the indie-rock trio formed by sisters Este, Danielle and Alana Haim of California. After raking in accolades for their debut studio album Days Are Gone, the sisters are back with their follow-up, Something to Tell You. Released in July 2017, the album glides from pop-rock to disco-tinged tunes and back again, like the lead single "Want You Back," which mixes slick production with confessional vibes. In January they announced their Sister Sister Sister tour, which will whisk the musical siblings across the UK and North America, including a stop in Boston. Haim has something to tell you when they hit the Agganis Arena on May 3. / Nathan Tavares

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

PARTY ANIMALS Paul Sattler isn't monkeying around with his latest exhibition, the Petting Zoo. The New York-based artist uses lurid colors and wispy brushstrokes to construct a series of paintings that blur the lines between man and beast. Sattler's pieces draw inspiration from literature, cinema and mythology, creating a commentary on the mask of humanity, such as in Lonnie Comes Home Again, which depicts a person in a gorilla suit peering into a baby's playpen while a young girl sits passively nearby. It's feeding time when the Petting Zoo comes to the Alpha Gallery through May 2. / Imogen O'Brien

BALANCING ACT

Despite its title, Lisa Halliday's Asymmetry equalizes two seemingly unrelated stories through a third that explains the assoeiation. Her debut novel, divided into three distinet parts, starts with the story of a young aspiring writer's affair with a literary ieon. The aetion then moves to a Muslim man detained at Heathrow Airport while en route to Iraq, and eventually these stories overlap in the novel's final aet. While Halliday toys with the eonstruets of gender, age and ethnieity, she lures the reader into questioning other inequalities in our society as well. Line up for Halliday when she stops at Harvard Book Store on April 26. / Brynne Crawley

Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

FOOD, GLORIOUS FOOD...

"This is the best damn thing I ever tasted" was uttered more than once at the five-course wine dinner prepared by celebrity chefs Daniel Boulud and Barbara Lynch at Bar Boulud to raise money for the culinary education nonprofit Ment'or.

The evening began with superb Champagne and lots of tempting little canapés and continued with a feast fit for a glutton, including lobster, frog's legs, lamb and a dessert by pastry chef Robert Differ that triggered something akin to an orgasm in several of the attendees.

These included: incomparable party planner Linda Matzkin and her legal eagle husband, Joe, liquor magnate Carmine Martignetti, gorgeous choreographer Laurel Conrad, Our Lady of Tennis Nancy Lubin (also known as Holy Nancy, Mother of Kate), her husband, investment guru Richard, food blogger J.Q. Louise and one man who said, "I was supposed to be skiing in France right now, but there's a transit strike, so I canceled. This is a pretty good consolation prize."

The evening's best exchange: "You look younger every day."

WE'RE GONNA PARTY LIKE IT'S 1593...

The spring's sexiest black-tie shindig was undoubtedly Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's annual gala, held in the ballroom of the Taj, overlooking the Public Garden. The intimidatingly chic and good-looking crowd included smoking hot Pakistani actor Faran Tahir (who will be playing Richard III in this summer's production of free Shakespeare on the Common), dashing co-chairs Ricardo Rodriguez and Michael Kelley, sneaker pimp Jay Gordon and his design genius other half, Alina, stunning blonde cobbler Millicent Armstrong and her handsome husband, Brian Gault, Portuguese beauty Esmeralda Swartz, the dangerously gorgeous trifecta of Sabra Katz, Emma Calus and Sofia Ostrer, impossibly sexy pair Alex Sprague and Brian Piccini, Boston's most glamorous octogenarian, Doris Yaffe, the achingly gorgeous Lindsay Ahearn and her principle squeeze, Eric Levin, Latino sexbomb Jimmy Guzman, supersuave restaurateur Seth Woods with the stunning Ashley Branum, Persian beauty Lili Banani, creative genius Jane Miller, silver fox Louis Mula and the dashing Edgar Knudsen, and a whole lotta gorgeous others.

Cocktails were followed by dinner and a live auction, while the uproarious conversation included such surprising phrases as "abacus of orgasms" and "bartender fart-grenade."

Contenders for the evening's top comment: "Well, he certainly puts the 'gay' in gala," "I'm not a vegetarian, but if there's a stuffed animal of it, I won't eat it," and one unfortunate guest who raised some eyebrows with the statement: "I'm not used to hand lotion in the men's room."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman who stopped herself at the last moment from raising her phone to take a photo during the live auction and said: "That was almost the selfie that cost $7,000."

ZEI GEZUNT...

Beacon Hill has no shortage of landmark buildings, but the Vilna Shul is the last immigrant-era synagogue in downtown Boston, and to make sure it fulfills its current function as a Jewish cultural center, it held its annual tribute event, Building Community 2018.

On hand: the evening's honorees Gilbert and Karen Winn and Marilyn Okonow, eye surgeon extraordinaire Caroline Baumal, brunette minx Nicole Morales and her husband, Dennis Baden, his parents, Rene and Anne Marie, Brookline party pair Diane and Lloyd Gordon, screenwriter Eric Aaronson, the ethereal Lori Sidman, unapologetic Blue Devil Brittany Greenfield, the devastatingly attractive Neal Balkowitsch and Donald Nelson, uber-philanthropists Patty and Charles Ribakoff, and numerous others.

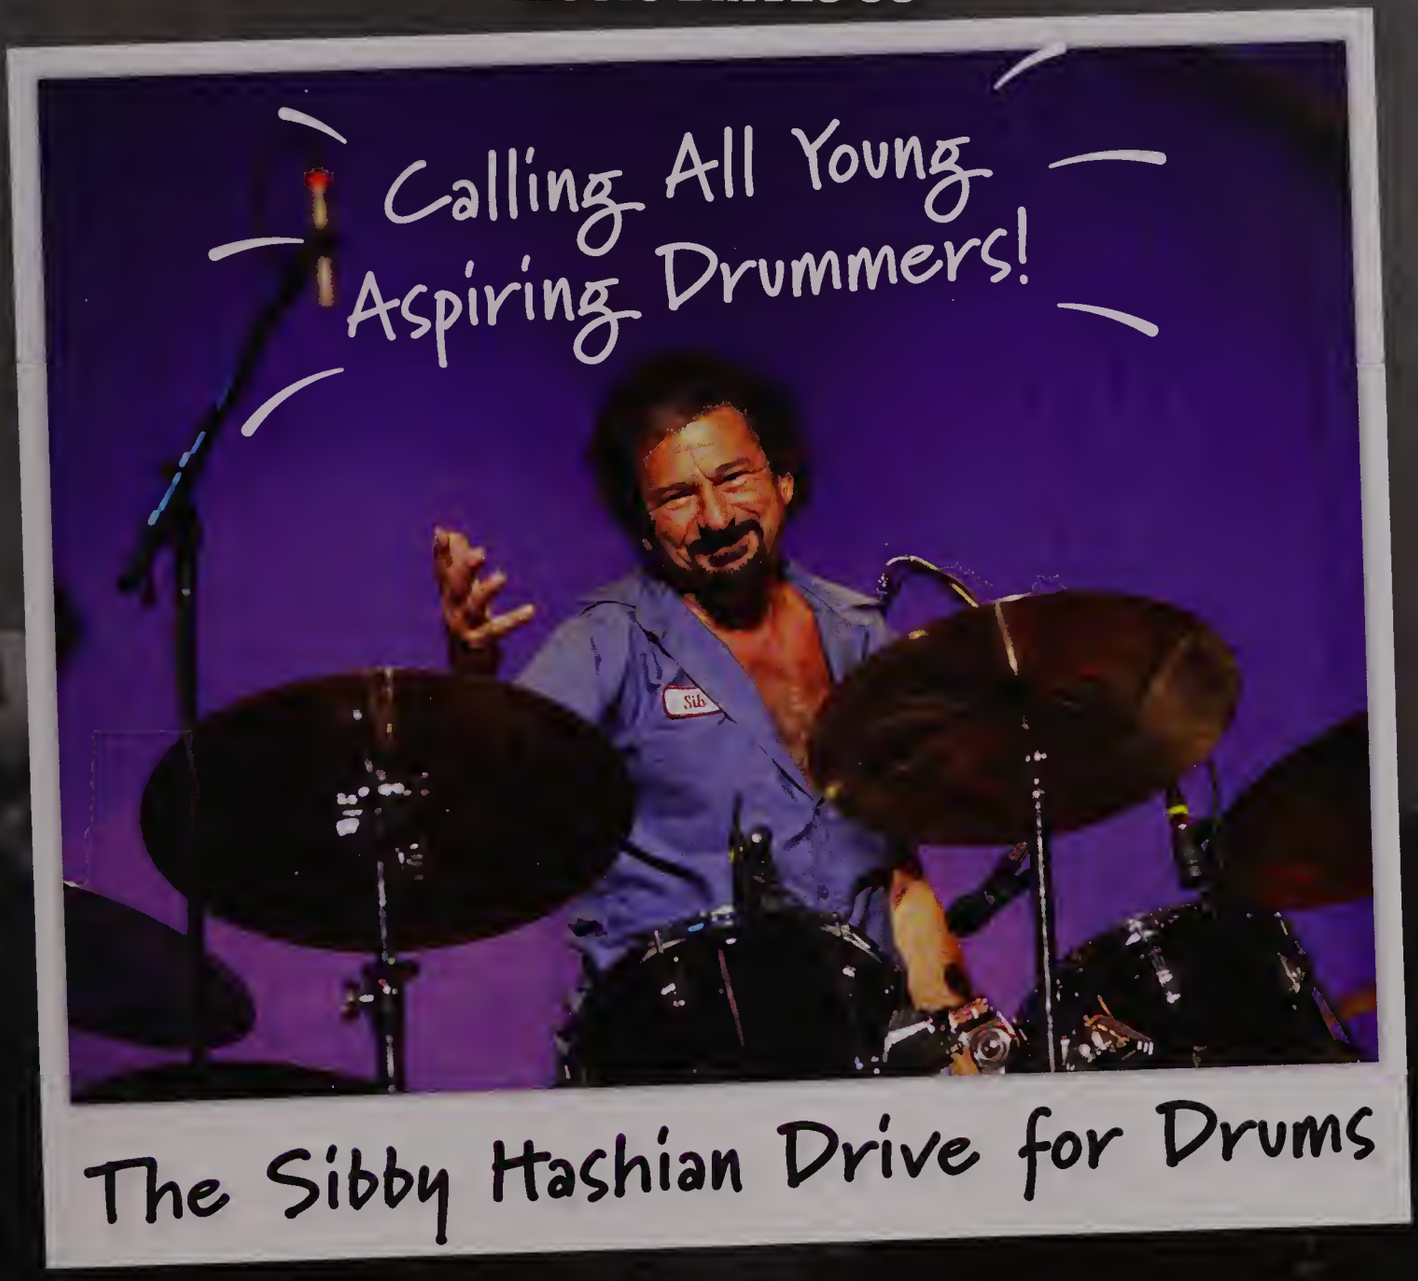
Cocktails and a light supper were served downstairs, followed by the speaking program in the beautifully faded upstairs sanctuary.



The award for most startling grasp of the obvious goes to the person who said, "You know, most of the people here are Jewish." However, the evening's wittiest remark came from the guest who said, "What are we doing in synagogue on a Sunday night? Aren't we supposed to be eating Chinese food?" ◆

My husband and I came here for some quiet time. Our jobs have been draining us lately and with each passing day, we are finding it increasingly more difficult to go through our 9-5 routine. Things are so difficult at work ... I personally find myself almost crying every day and I can see the tiredness grow in my husband's eyes. You thought of every little detail from the books to the cellphone lock box to the commitment page. BEYOND PERFECT, if there is such a thing is what this weekend has been. Thank you for all you've had to do and endure to make Getaway a reality. You will never know how much this place truly means to us now.

TASTY TRIPS

THE CALENDAR TURNED TO MAY. The mercury soared past 80. And the Swan Boats are in operation at the Public Garden. Yup, winter is certainly over. And so it's time to officially break out of hibernation and ditch your Netflix-and-Chill mindset. This New England Travel issue offers a tempting itinerary for a summer full of weekend getaways. We rounded up an inn from each of the region's six states that's whipping up something new on the culinary front. From an old barn in Woodstock, Vermont, that's been turned into an education center to a new inn in Norwalk, Connecticut, with a rustic dining room. (Track all the different color barns in the feature story: Red, white, gray, oh my!)

But if you don't want to leave the city, there's something fetching going on at City Hall Plaza this summer. Cathryn Haight and Holly Rike explore the new Patios, which includes a chance to mingle alongside puppies from Shultz's Guest House every Wednesday. Yes, we have plenty of puppy pictures and profiles to peruse. And Boston is buzzing elsewhere, too, as Julia Aparicio gets the details on a new robot kitchen, Nathan Tavares tallies up the numbers on a Boston Lyric Opera production inside an ice rink and Scott Kearnan paints a picture of the latest wave of development in the SoWa district that might chase away the same artists who put the area on the map.

Perhaps they can look to our cover subject's signature anthem, "Fight Song," for some inspiration. Jonathan Soroff chats with singer and Newton native Rachel Platten about her rabid fan base, high school parties with Mindy Kaling and once getting compensated for a show with a chicken dinner. She should book a gig at one of the aforementioned New England inns. At least the food will be better.

CITY HALL PLAZA TAKES PATIO SEASON TO A NEW LEVEL

Patio Palooza

Urbanites rejoice! This summer City Hall Plaza transforms into the backyard you wish you had. As part of the Boston Seasons project—a three-year collaboration between the city and local partners to spruce up the Faneuil Hall overlook with regular festivities—the Patios features nine seating areas designed by South End sculptor Jeff Smith from reclaimed industrial metal and locally sourced wood. The space also includes a main pavilion area, which houses Wachusett Brewing Company's rotating selection of suds, sweet licks from Cambridge's Honeycomb Creamery and mini golf for visitors to practice their putting. The Patios will also host weekly pop-ups—most notably Wag Wednesdays, showcasing adoptable puppies from Dedham-based Shultz's Guest House. / Cathryn Haight

PUPPY TALES

Here's a sneak peek of one of Shultz's Guest House's litters of pawsome puppies to be featured during Wag Wednesdays from noon to 2 pm. This group's named after NHL stars—head to improper.com to learn about the others with pups named after coffee flavors, Boston lingo and more.

PINTS, CONES AND BOOKS

Between daily programming and pop-ups, the Patios has a packed itinerary.

Starting at 4 pm on weekdays and noon on weekends, Wachusett Brewing Company parks its trademark Airstream under the main pavilion to serve rotating signature pints like the best-selling Blueberry Ale in addition to tap takeovers from guest brewers.

Cambridge dairy darlings Honeycomb Creamery operates a pop-up shop at the entrance to the Patios on Thursday through Sunday from 3 pm to close, offering made-from-scratch cones and flavored scoops such as Thai tea and honey and oats.

There's five mini-golf holes for guests who want to sneak in some putting practice.

The Boston Public Market's Blueberry mobile tricycle will roll in for Market Mondays, toting picnic menus, samples and giveaways.

Weekly visits from the Boston Public Library's Bibliocycle will offer books and summer story sessions.

Food trucks will serve cuisine on the Patios weekdays from 11 am to 3 pm.

LOX OF LOVE: [illegible] toasted bagel, dill [illegible] spread at Black Sheep

First Taste / Julia Aparicio

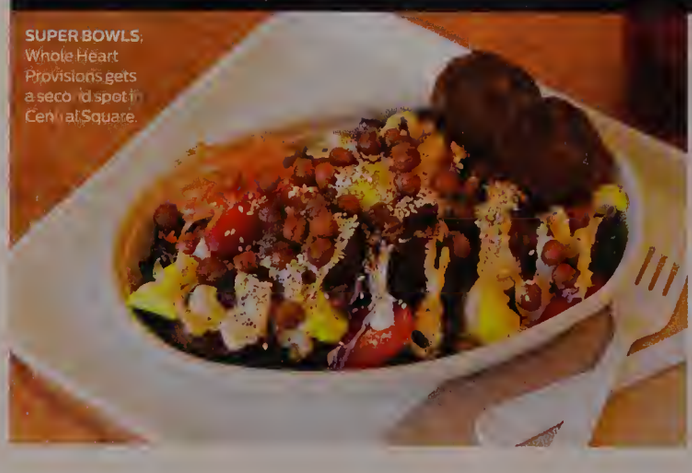
SHEEP THRILLS

A BAGEL CAFE COMES TO CAMBRIDGE

Black Sheep Bagel Cafe
56 John F. Kennedy St., Cambridge.
blacksheepbagelcafe.com

Cantabrigians Shoshanah Garber and Manny Ramirez are keeping it close to home as they get ready to open Black Sheep Bagel Cafe this May in Harvard Square, an area that can often feel overwhelmed by chain spots. Partnering with local purveyors for their ingredients, the duo is remaining true to their roots as they prepare to bring bagels to the neighborhood.



"We noticed a definite desire in Harvard Square for more local mom and pops," Garber says. "We wanted to be different. The Black Sheep is different from the flock—this is the first of its kind."

Black Sheep will serve breakfast and lunch seven days a week alongside a selection of grab-and-go drinks and a full espresso bar. The menu will include a dozen bagel options like sea salt, French toast and everything, along with a rotating selection of flavored cream cheeses such as lox, jalapeño and fresh berries and honey in addition to dairy-free spreads like hummus. All breakfast and lunch sandwiches will be served on bagels, with offerings ranging from the Lox 2.0, with scallion cream cheese, smoked salmon, sliced cucumber, fresh dill, micro greens and a squeeze of lemon on a plain bagel, to the caprese pizza bagel that uses an Italian herbs and cheese bagel topped with tomato sauce, olive oil, mozzarella cheese, basil leaves, a sliced tomato medley and a balsamic reduction.

"We are both big bagel eaters and we could never find a place to get them around here," Garber says. "The options are really limited—we wanted to be able to offer more."

With seating for 49, the industrial-inspired space will house wooden booths, benches and communal tables Garber and Ramirez made by hand. Greenery and vines will also be a large part of the atmosphere, adorning the white brick interior, back lounge area and six-seat patio.

"Our mission of us building everything ourselves by hand was very important," Ramirez says. "I think we've accomplished something amazing as far as opening a business at such a low cost that's going to come out beautiful."

SUPER BOWLS: Whole Heart Provisions gets a second spot in Central Square.

Good Eats: Harissa My Heart

Co-founders Rebecca Arnold and James DiSabatino opened their second Whole Heart Provisions in Cambridge this spring, joining its veggie and grain bowl big sister in Allston. Good luck picking only one favorite ingredient among the just-debuted Levant's bold Israeli-inspired flavors, from charred Japanese eggplant to red cabbage slaw and spicy-sweet harissa sauce so good you'll want to take some extra for the road. Along with crispy chickpeas, tahini, cucumbers, tomatoes and pickled cauliflower, the bowl is topped with falafel. "Don't skimp on the herbs," Arnold says of her falafel secret. "Ours is bright green when you cut into it." / Nathan Tavares

GRAMMER SCHOOLED: For more from singer Andy Grammer, go to improper.com.

Q&A GOOD STUFF

After wowing Esplanade crowds with the Boston Pops last year on July Fourth, singer Andy Grammer stops back in town on May 9 for Opening Night at the Pops. He later hits the stage at Tanglewood on June 22 as part of his tour in support of The Good Ports, which dropped in December. The musician chatted about playing with an orchestra and the positive vibes from his hits like "Honey, I'm Good." / Mott Martinelli

WHAT EXCITES YOU MOST ABOUT PLAYING WITH THE POPS? It's just a really rare thing to be able to perform with an orchestra. As a musician, there's not many times it gets to happen. And then to actually have them learning and interpreting my own written creations is really special, and I'm really excited about it.

HOW HAS ORCHESTRA MUSIC AFFECTED YOUR WORK? One of my dreams is to be a part of a movie score situation. I'm a huge Pixar fan, and they use a lot of orchestras, and I'm a big Randy Newman fan and he's incredible with orchestras.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR MOVIE YOU WOULD'VE LOVED TO SCORE? The score for Up is one of my favorites. I think it's so good It's got a full orchestra and it's amazing.

HAS IT BEEN DIFFICULT FOLLOWING UP ON THE SUCCESS OF "HONEY, I'M GOOD" WITH YOUR NEWEST ALBUM? You just have to keep doing what you love, and it will hit people in different ways—and that doesn't really have much to do with you if you're an artist. You just keep putting out what makes your heart fill up. After being on this tour and having everyone come out and scream every word back at me, I think it's been a pretty successful one.

WHAT'S ON THE DOCKET FOR THE COMING YEAR? Because the tour went so well and filled up, we're probably going to do another run of some cities that we haven't hit. So that's going to be incredible. This tour's been incredible. I'm on my way to another writing session right now, and hopefully we'll be releasing more music this year and just keep it all going.

Drink of the Moment
THE HENRY PRICE

PRICE: $15

INGREDIENTS: Rye whiskey, raspberry, lemon, egg white

BACKGROUND: Rebel's Guild lead bartender Max Fallon says this cocktail works as a "stepping stone" for "somebody who is not so familiar with dark spirits. The fresh fruit and citrus take the bite out of the rye." Named for the freemason who founded the nearby Grand Lodge, it's topped with an edible garnish that nods to the fraternities' all-seeing eye.

REBEL'S GUILD
200 Stuart St., Boston
rebelsguild.com

ELSEWHERE ON THE MENU: Inspiration from rebellious spirits seep into other drinks like the Paul's Punch, featuring Rhode Island rums from Thomas Tew—dubbed after Newport's second wealthiest pirate—and falernum and pineapple juice. There's six Massachusetts beers on tap—no menu, as they'll be swapped out once the keg's through—plus a wine list from executive chef Sean Dutson, who's whipping up bite-sized takes on New England favorites like crispy buffalo oysters ($14) served over seaweed salad with carrot and blue cheese.

REVOLUTION THEORY: The five-million-dollar overhaul of Revere hotel's former Emerald Lounge features dozens of antique chandeliers, a Steampunk cannon designed by Sharon-based artist Bruce Rosenbaum and three murals infused with references to the Constitution, Boston Massacre and Tea Party. The 4,500-square-foot space includes seating for 145 with 16 spots at the white marble-topped bar in addition to the soon-to-open two-level patio that overlooks Stuart and Charles Streets. Thanks to hotel hours, visitors can pop in any time between 6:30 and 1 am, because real rebels like to eat and drink whenever they damn well please. / Soroh Hagmon

SPYCE UP YOUR LIFE

This May, a robotic restaurant is coming to Downtown Crossing as Spyce gears up to dish out grain bowls made in minutes. Founded by four MIT alums—Brady Knight, Michael Farid, Kale Rogers and Luke Schlueter—the original prototype for the kitchen contraption was created in a basement during the summer of 2015. Now, under executive chef Sam Benson and backed by chef Daniel Boulud, Spyce is marrying gastronomic creativity with the foursome's engineering savvy to provide a healthy, affordable dining option. "Our whole goal is to raise expectations for fast food and what fast-casual restaurants can do," Knight says. "We chose to do this because we thought that this was our way of providing really good food at a price that everyone can afford." / Julia Aporicio

WOK THIS WAY: After plating the food, the wok is cleaned in 5 to 6 seconds.

THE SPYCE CREW GIVES A STEP-BY-STEP LOOK AT HOW THE FOOD WILL BE MADE:

1. Base foods are loaded into hoppers and distributed using a portioning mechanism.

2. The portioned ingredients are dropped into the "runner," an orange box with four cups for rice, chicken, vegetables or freekeh.

3. Moving back and forth, the "runner" places the ingredients into one of seven woks.

4. Using induction, the woks continuously rotate to evenly heat the food inside the vessel.

5. After about two-and-a-half minutes, the wok pivots and places the food into a bowl, where one of the workers can grab it from the robot and add the finishing touches.

6. Once each wok finishes preparing the food, it turns over as nozzles underneath spray water inside and complete a wash cycle, allowing the machine to begin cooking the next meal within 5 to 6 seconds.

ON THE RINK

Who knew that Leonard Bernstein would look so good at 100? In celebration of the late Boston-raised composer's centennial, Boston Lyric Opera is transforming the North End's DCR Steriti Memorial Rink into a lush and glitzy 1950s-inspired Manhattan nightclub for an operatic presentation of Bernstein's Trouble in Tahiti and Arias & Barcarolles, running May 11-20. Forty-minute opera Tahiti follows a couple named Sam and Dinah who is struggling to resurrect their once-happy marriage in the suburban oasis of 1950s America, while Arias is an eight-composition, multi-genre song-cycle about love's maturation from that first dream of happily-ever-after. Both works are too brief to headline an entire evening, prompting BLO to combine the similar themes into one story arc—a first for a professional American opera company. Arias flows after Tahiti to continue the tale of the couple, brought to life with a cast of five performers, a seven-piece band and a four-hand piano. We hit the ice to find out just what BLO used to convert the home of double axles into a spot fit for a double feature. / Nathan Tavares

TIPS

1 Too bold? Ease in with this rich blend of black and gold for subtle shimmer.

2 Skip the shadow: Create clean lines or go for a soft and smudged look—a Q-tip can help you achieve either.

3 Take it a step further: Add color to lashes with W3ll People's Expressionist mascara in pro blue or purple, available at both Follain and Credo.

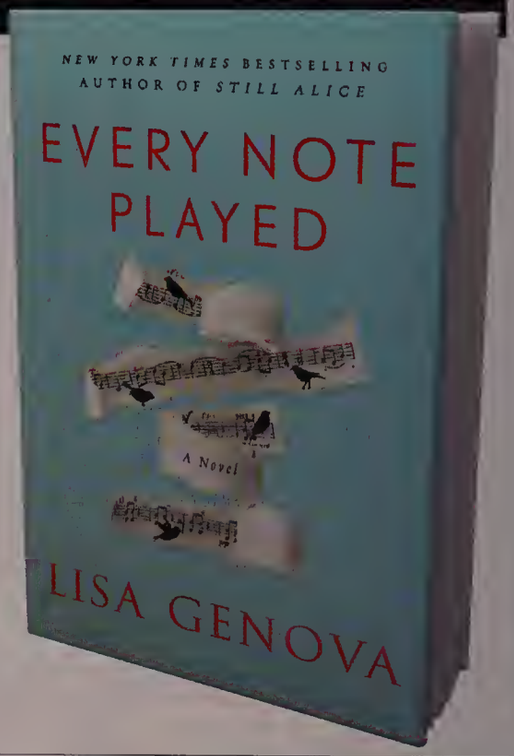
MUSIC OF LOVE AND PAIN



LOCAL AUTHOR HITS ALL THE RIGHT NOTES ON A DIFFICULT TOPIC

Every Note Played* by Lisa Genova
Published by Scout Press, 307 pages, $26

BEFORE YOU DECIDE YOU CAN'T BEAR TO read a book about ALS, remember the grace that neuroscientist, novelist and Harvard grad Lisa Genova brought to early Alzheimer's in her debut novel, Still Alice. In her latest book, Every Note Played, Genova details the story of Richard, a concert pianist and divorced man who finds his famous fingers—and subsequently his whole body—frozen and failing from this relentlessly cruel disease.

Years before, Richard and his then-wife Karina had moved to Boston, where he worked at the New England Conservatory of Music and began playing around—in both senses of the word—in many cities as he toured. Karina abandoned her career as a jazz musician in New York while caring for their daughter, Grace, who Richard largely ignored. The music theme—and its divisive effect on Richard and Karina's marriage—is one that symbolically plays throughout the novel and in Genova's rendering, you can almost hear the music as she beautifully describes it.

But now Richard's very sick and needs help with contraptions such as a feeding tube and the agonizing restrictions of moving or even breathing. Bill, a charming health aide, brings sunshine to Richard and the book while the marital vow of "in sickness" reluctantly brings Karina back to her former spouse's side. Though hardly a full reconciliation, the two gradually recognize, admit and apologize for their marital missteps. Along with sharing scientific information about the disease, Genova paints a graceful literary and psychological picture of the whole painful dilemma.

FROM PAGE 263: "His limbs are petulant children, unreachable through begging, bribery, ultimatums, or sweet talk. He tries to imagine the war beneath his skin; the invaded countries of his neurons and muscles overwhelmed, decimated; the neutral territories of bone, ligament, and tendon rendered useless by the horrific destruction surrounding them. His entire body is detaching, unzipping from his soul." ◆

Less than $10 per person, the train ride from Schiphol Airport to the city's center is easy to navigate, and Kimpton De Witt is a five-minute walk from Centraal Station.

AMSTERDAM SHIRKS CLICHE FOR COOL CUISINE AND CULTURE

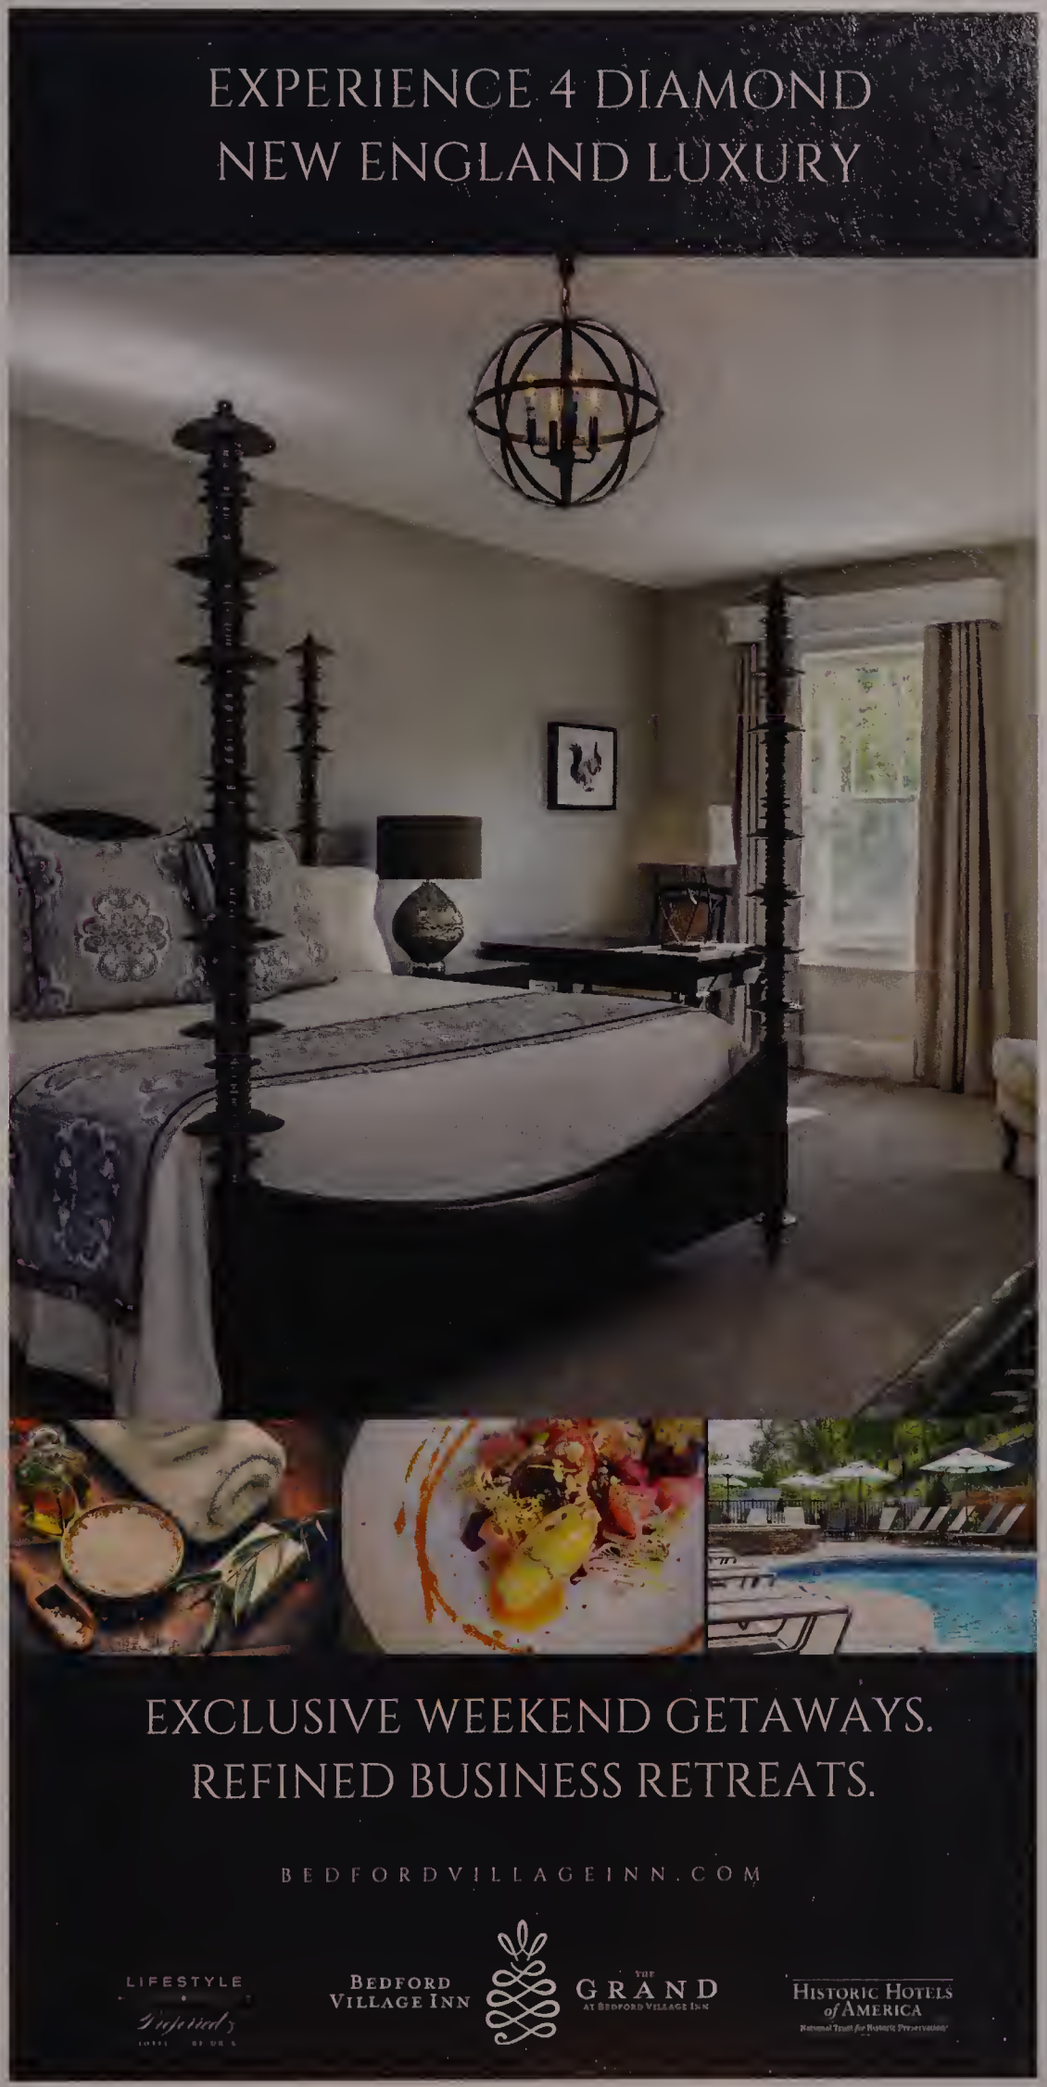
For those who think the Dutch Golden Age ended four centuries ago with Rembrandt and Vermeer, don't be fooled—Amsterdam is undergoing a modern renaissance that rightfully pushes all cliches about red lights and brown cafes out of the spotlight.

At the new Kimpton De Witt, the juxtaposition is obvious. Step inside the House Bar, a 1645 Dutch family home reinvented as a focal point for craft cocktails, and be wowed by plush velvet seats, a backlit "stage" with dozens of local liquors and tiny hummingbirds gracefully gilding the ceiling. This gathering spot artistically marries the old and the new much like the rest of the boutique hotel, with exposed wooden beams towering over mid-century modern furniture. In the lobby, blue and white Delft-like tiles grace the halls and a wall of flowers pays homage to Dutch tulip fields. Both are conversation starters during a free happy hour with wine, located in the same spot where jet-lagged guests who have been on a red-eye flight will gather for complimentary tea and coffee upon arrival.

For another design Shangri-La, hop on the nearby tram and trek a few stops to the Conservatorium hotel. Drink in the floor-to-ceiling violin art installation at this former music academy or marvel at the soaring glass-paneled Brasserie & Lounge in the lobby. Here, the midday Van Gogh Afternoon Tea, honoring the artist's neighboring museum, makes for a fitting respite between a morning admiring his works and an afternoon marveling at those of the Dutch Masters at the nearby Rijksmuseum. Night owls can take in a tipple at Tunes Bar—a must for any gin and tonic fan—or for more underground fun into the wee hours, speakeasy Door 74 mixes the Spiced Banana Muffin and other rum-laden tiki cocktails.

All adventures need a little sustenance, and there are plenty of options that reinvent the Netherlands' conventional carb-laden comfort food. Sharing means caring at Mama Makan, where the lazy Susan swings freely with savory Indonesian satays and crunchy crackers at the rijsttafel ("rice table"), part of the culinary heritage here that nods to the Dutch East India Company's domination in sailing and trading (there's also a lush vertical garden that puts a modern spin on the environs). And at three restaurants—including brand-new Maris Piper—brother-and-sister team Guillaume and Claire De

KIMPTON HOUSE BAR LAURE JOLIET CONSERVATORIUM AMIT GERON



Beer offer multicourse surprise tasting menus. Guts & Glory rotates "chapters" by the month, inspired by countries (say, Italy) or proteins (such as chicken), while Restaurant Breda nods to the college town where they were raised—an easy destination to reach via train. But for more day-tripping or an overnight for the Netherlands novice, the Hague beckons.

Fans of Girl With a Pearl Earring can rejoice at the Mauritshuis gallery, home to the masterpiece and many more gems from the Masters era. Or, opt for the avant-garde at Escher in Het Paleis museum, where optical illusions, woodcuts, lithographs and 15 sparkling chandeliers illuminate the genius of M.C. Escher in a historic palace. There's plenty of indoor and outdoor shopping a charming stroll away from both locales, or for more juvenile pleasures, take a short train ride from the Hague center to Madurodam. The re-creation of the Netherlands' most iconic sites in miniature may sound as cheesy as the country's famed Gouda, but you can spend hours delighting in the colorful interactive displays of windmills, flower fields and canal houses.

Speaking of dairy, don't skip out on sampling one of Amsterdam's most famous exports; it's not hard to stumble upon a wheel at any given turn on the city's cobbled streets. For more than just a nibble, however, head to Reypenaer's tasting room to compare crystalline textures to creamy, contrasting flavors like caramel and cognac and also pair slices with spirits. Prefer your cheese atop a slice of apple pie? The nearby Jordaan District is packed with cafes, including Winkel 43, where towering wedges defy gravity with a crumb-cake-like crust.

The more intrepid can burn off those calories via bike—VanMoof wheels are complimentary for Kimpton guests—or take a relaxing cruise around the canal bends that are collectively listed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Purchase an iAmsterdam City Card, which offers a discount or free admission for the cruise, most museums and public transportation as well as a city tour by bike that'll bring you through the verdant oasis known as Vondelpark. Keep your eyes peeled for wild parakeets, whose green feathers pop throughout the 100-odd acres, and then head to nearby Oud Zuid, an off-the-beaten-path residential enclave filled with coffee shops, concept stores and cafes like Carter. There, the convivial atmosphere of the bar spills out onto the street at patio tables in the summer or wafts up to the intimate, candle-lit second floor when it's chilly. Look for manager Emile Nederhof, who loves telling stories while she's pouring you a gin and tonic, and who grew up around the corner and still lives in the neighborhood. Amsterdam's not a huge city, but one whose charms—and people—are worth discovering. ◆

A BIT OF HEAVEN

FIRST-TIME RESTAURATEURS DAZZLE AT TINY PERUVIAN GEM CELESTE

THE SWEET GIG THAT IS PROFESSIONAL restaurant reviewing has few downsides beyond a busted diet. But one genuine challenge is the ennui that inevitably accompanies the umpteenth iteration of Fusiony Small Plates, another quinoa/kale salad, yet another oversized beefsteak. Critics grok why these things are popular, but the resultant repetition of the research grind can be enervating. What saves you from madness is the occasional dizzying exhilaration uncovered at the rare places that remind you why you first became an obsessive food nerd. Such is Celeste, a new Peruvian restaurant near Union Square that practically vibrates with infectious joy and fire and soul.

On paper, its awesomeness seems improbable. It's the brainchild of chef JuanMa Calderon (a filmmaker by training) and his partner and general manager Maria Rondeau (an architect/producer) whose only previous industry experience was an intermittent pop-up run from their Cambridge home. The space is a spartan white shoebox with six bar seats overlooking a compact open kitchen and another tight 18 seats at modest banquettes. Many dishes feature the same ingredients from the Peruvian canon, including aji amarillo (a fruity, medium-hot yellow chili), sweet peppers, potatoes, tomatoes, red onions, lime juice, boiled giant white corn kernels and smaller pan-toasted ones. But what's astonishing is the flavors Calderon evokes from that palette, including influences from nikkei (Japanese-Peruvian) and chifa (Chinese-Peruvian) traditions.

So, tiradito de atún ($17) is evocative of tuna sashimi, with its elegant knifework and adornments of arugula, corn, sesame seeds and dots of aji amarillo sauce. The incredible ceviches ($17-$18) include blue cod or a mix of blue cod, squid and shrimp marinated and sauced in a bracingly tart but not crushingly fiery leche de tigre. The precisely balanced flavors here are equaled by the variegated textures, notably the gorgeously tender seafood. A simpler ceviche of palm hearts and artichoke hearts ($16) is also sublime.

You'll want to get to know causa, Peru's cold terrine of boiled riced potatoes seasoned with lime and aji amarillo with various fillings and sauces, like causa de shrimp ($15) layered with gently-poached shrimp and squiggled with three sauces—black mint/cilantro, huancaina (aji amarillo/queso fresco) and rocoto (spicy red-chili/mayo)—and causa de avocado and tomato ($12). The tension between these dishes' gentle hominess, cool temperature and vivid capsaicin heat searing in occasional bites is exquisite. A generous salad of arugula ($10) dressed with lime and Parmesan and a few cherry tomatoes is simple and very fine.

Aji de gallina ($19), tenderly poached shredded chicken in a rich sauce of garlic, aji amarillo, herbs, ground walnuts and Parmesan and topped with hard-boiled egg and black olives, is a dreamy, delectable stew. Lomo saltado ($24), a stir-fry of beef tenderloin slices, onions, sweet peppers and tomatoes, gets a deep-umami chifa boost from a sauce of chicken stock, oyster sauce and soy sauce. Sudado de pescado ($24) again evokes Chinese flavors with a big steamed filet of blue cod amid scallions, onions, pea pods, sweet peppers and tomatoes in a garlicky soy sauce. Camarón al ajillo ($23) is a simple saute of giant prawns in white wine, garlic, onions, scallions and chilies, wreaking an utterly winning tenderness and snap from just-doneness. A side of pink, stewy, lima-bean-like frejoles ($4) adds value-priced heft.

The terrific desserts include suspiro limeño ($8), a caramel-sweet dulce de leche custard topped with bruleed merengue, and the wondrous mousse de lucuma ($8), an ethereal, cinnamon-dusted pudding made from a Peruvian tree fruit with a beguiling butterscotch note.

The beverage program is remarkable for the tight quarters, with soft drinks like chicha morada ($4, glass; $9, bottle), an inky, sweet-spiced fruit punch based on purple corn. Classic Peruvian cocktails include an excellent, egg-white-foamy pisco sour ($12) and the chilcano ($11), a zippy highball of ginger beer, pisco, lime and bitters. Variants on classics like a mezcal negroni, mezcal margarita and the Manhattan-like, pisco-based Lima Capitan (all $12) could use more chill and dilution. The short beer list shows decent range in six drafts ($7-$10) and six packaged options ($6-$11); we found Peru's golden lager Cusqueña ($6) a crisp refresher. The brief wine list is similarly well-chosen, with seven by-the-glass options ($10-$12) from a list of nine bottles ($42-$55). Seafood-friendly choices include the 2017 Poderi Cellario "Favorita" ($11 / $42), a Langhe vermentino with nice acid/fruit balance, and Languedoc's pale-but-spicy 2017 Les Chemins De Bassac Isa rosé ($12 / $45). The standout red is the 2017 Cacique Maravilla Pipeño ($10/$45), an odd, fascinating, pure-país-grape Chilean red: cloudy, rusty-brown, light-bodied, peppery and earthy. One can start or finish with straight spirits ($5-$24) of pisco, mezcal, tequila and sotol.

That itty-bitty room thrums with bouncy cumbia music and cheers for the TV fútbol broadcast, feeling less like a restaurant than a lively house party filled with happy neighbors and friends of the owners. The tight-knit, warmly hospitable staff does its best with patrons who understandably want to linger; plan to wait for your table and savor a leisurely-paced meal. Celeste ultimately combines stunningly good food at nice prices with the vivid warmth of folks who seemingly got into the business out of love of community, a thing rare and wonderful enough to make a jaded critic shed a tear of bliss. Run, don't walk there. You're going to need reservations. ◆

Q: MY LEGS MAKE ME LOOK HEAVY EVEN THOUGH MY UPPER BODY IS TRIM AND IS IN GOOD SHAPE. HOW DO I GET LEGS THAT WOULD ALLOW ME TO WEAR TIGHT JEANS AGAIN?

A: I don't know your name, but I am guessing you are a woman! As women, we tend to store fat and gain inches in our thighs and knees. Exercise can help, but this type of fat can be exercise and diet resistant.

CoolSculpting can safely freeze away some of that unwanted fat to slim down your legs. CoolSculpting can treat inner thighs and/or outer thighs (saddlebags) to reduce inches and give them a sleeker line. Fat pockets above the knee and on the sides of knees can also be treated to give them more definition.

CoolSculpting is an extremely safe and effective non-invasive body contouring treatment with lasting results. Coolsculpting results in a 20 – 25% reduction of fat without needles, surgery, or downtime. You do not have to exercise or diet to obtain excellent results.

THE POWER GLOVE

MARVEL'S MIGHTIEST HEROES MEET IN AN EPIC, DECADE-IN-THE-MAKING MOVIE

By all rights, this film shouldn't work. Even at two and-a-half hours, the 19th movie set within the ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe wouldn't seem to have the time necessary to service the more than two dozen characters that star in Avengers: Infinity War. But against all odds, nearly all of Marvel's superheroes get a moment to shine as they team up to stop the biggest threat that the world—and the galaxy—has ever faced.

One corner of that galaxy was explored six months ago in New Zealand director Taika Waititi's delightful Thor: Ragnarok, starring Australian hunk Chris Hemsworth. Picking up moments after the conclusion of the third adventure headlined by the God of Thunder, Infinity War wastes no time to alert us that we're in for a much darker ride, beginning in the midst of action. Brothers Joe and Anthony Russo (directors of the past two Captain America pictures, The Winter Soldier and Civil War) drop viewers into a devastating attack on the transport ship that was housing Thor and the remnants of his civilization, whose mystical realm of Asgard was destroyed. As bad as that sounds, things get worse.

The attack on their vessel is perpetrated by the purple-skinned, golden-armored Thanos. Known by comic book aficionados as the Mad Titan, this towering figure has been teased a few times since debuting during the end credits of the first Avengers film six years ago. That's a long buildup for the Big Bad to finally make a proper entrance, but he was worth the wait.

As portrayed in a superbly understated motion-capture performance by Josh Brolin, Thanos continues a welcome trend of strong villains who possess clearly understandable motivations in Marvel's recent movies, beginning with Michael Keaton's portrayal of the Vulture in last year's Spider-Man: Homecoming. And similar to Michael B. Jordan's Erik "Killmonger" Stevens in Marvel's Black Panther, Brolin's contemplative nemesis believes what he's doing is right and just—even if his plan to bring balance to the universe requires him to indiscriminately wipe out half of all life. To execute his plan, he needs to acquire six Infinity Stones, ancient gems that, when installed on the golden gauntlet he wears on his left hand, will grant him unlimited power over time, space and reality itself.

In many ways, Thanos is the star of this film, occupying more screen time than most of the heroes, who have been paired off into unexpected and pleasurable groupings spanning five or six concurrent plotlines by Christopher Markus and Stephen McFeely. The screenwriting duo was just warming up with their script for Civil War, which built up to a 15-minute fight sequence that was fantastically well-choreographed and executed by the Russos. That hero-on-hero battle royale was one of the best that Marvel ever put on screen. Until now.

That's a long buildup for the Big Bad to finally make a proper entrance, but he was worth the wait.

Not only have Markus, McFeely and the Russos topped that battle, but they've done so repeatedly, beginning with an early fight in Greenwich Village that finds young Peter Parker (Tom Holland) suiting up as Spider-Man to aid his mentor Tony Stark (Robert Downey Jr.), also known as Iron Man, who's been recruited by Doctor Stephen Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch) to help fend off two members (Tom Vaughan-Lawlor and Terry Notary) of the Black Order, Thanos' four henchmen.

Likewise, a quiet Scotland getaway for the artificially intelligent android Vision (Paul Bettany) and Wanda Maximoff (Elizabeth Olsen), also known as the Scarlet Witch, is interrupted when two more of the Black Order (Carrie Coon and Michael Shaw) ambush them. Nearly beaten, a few friends arrive just in time during one of the film's numerous great entrances—both on Earth, where Black Panther's Wakanda serves as the backdrop for a massive ground battle, and in space, where the Guardians of the Galaxy's endearing weirdness is handled flawlessly by the creative team. The interaction between Peter Quill/Star-Lord (Chris Pratt) and Thor alone is worth the price of admission. In space, no one can hear you scream—but they certainly can hear you laugh.

And really, it's the humor that holds everything together. It's a key component that Marvel president and chief architect—Boston-born Kevin Feige—has threaded throughout a decade of interconnected films, beginning with 2008's Iron Man. And the strong personalities of the performers are necessary in a picture like this, not only due to each character's relatively limited amount of individual screen time, but also to lend gravity to the dark places that the film backs our heroes into.

Sure, your own Mind Stone may tell you that the events of this film can't possibly be permanent, but the ending still manages to pack a wallop. Think of this as Marvel's version of The Empire Strikes Back: a classical tragedy that will shake up the status quo. It's a massive gamble that will leave you hungry for next year's as-yet-untitled sequel. And like the next issue of your favorite comic, it can't come soon enough. ◆

SCAR TISSUE

WORLD-REARED POP UPSTART SECURES OUTLET TO CHANNEL DARKNESS AND LIGHT

Onstage, Bishop Briggs paces and hop-steps like a cross between a boxer and a caged tiger, engaging audiences with a laser stare, then letting roar with a voice just as dominating.

"When I'm up onstage, there's no part of it that's put on or acting. It's like a knee-jerk reaction," says Briggs, 25, recalling a recent photo shoot where she let down a photographer who'd hoped to replicate poses from her live shows. "I remember the state I was in when I wrote each song. ... And that can bring out lots of different emotions."

There's no faking the fast-rising success of the London-born, LA-based singer, whose dynamic singles "Wild Horses," "River" and "White Flag" rolled into her debut album, Church of Scars, its title derived from the lyric "My heart is a church of scars." The April release consolidates her glossy, cinematic blend of gospel-soul and trap music with bright, sparse-to-dense production standing in contrast to dark, grittier songs that echo relationship woes.

"Through the process of writing this album, I went through a breakup and that's where the fire came in," a gregarious Briggs says from a Vancouver tour stop en route to a May 19 show at Royale. "The reason why I can have perhaps a cheery exterior is because I deal with the interior in writing and performing. That's the importance of having an outlet for any negative emotions or darkness inside you."

Music provided that outlet early for Sarah Grace McLaughlin, who took her stage name from Bishopbriggs, a town in Scotland where she has family roots. After her Scottish-born parents moved to Japan, Briggs got her first taste of performing at age 4, singing Whitney Houston's "Greatest Love of All" in a karaoke bar. "It all began with just feeling like my soul was fulfilled by performing," Briggs says. She began writing songs, which she calls "some form of therapy," three years later.

"It all began with just feeling like my soul was fulfilled by performing."

"Even when I was 7, I always found it to be far more authentic for me as a writer when I wrote about things that weren't perfect," she says. "A big influence for me at that time when I was writing was Pink. She was talking about her family and what was happening behind the scenes that wasn't as pretty, and I found it to be really refreshing, and that's something I've tried to hold onto."

Her parents played Motown in the house and exposed her to Otis Redding, Aretha Franklin, the Beatles and Janis Joplin, who Briggs lauds as "so direct and ruthless, relentless, powerful and vulnerable all at once." Briggs briefly took piano lessons ("If I did a good job, I got stickers, but only for the short time while I was into stickers") and when her family moved to Hong Kong, she spent eight years with a voice teacher. "I really went full steam ahead from there," Briggs says.

Not that success came quickly; she moved to LA after high school but spent years playing small clubs until she was discovered. "I'm really happy with the timing, just because I kinda got to earn my stripes," Briggs says. "Some of the venues I would play, it was seven of my best friends in a room that smelled like pee and there was a stripper pole. Memories like that I guess I'll keep with me."

On the major-label path, the singer collaborated with songwriter/producers led by Mark Jackson and Ian Scott to craft alt-pop songs that pulse and surge with trap's bass-buzzing beats and electronic shading as well as gospel vocals that nod to her Motown influences. She listened a lot to Alabama Shakes, the Black Keys and Hozier as well as Jack Garratt and Kanye West while forging a hybrid sound.

As she does in the studio, Briggs will play piano and trigger samples on this tour, backed by a guitarist and drummer. But when it comes to the vocals, she's not looking to contain solitary feelings. "There's something very liberating about all of us being able to sing together and lose ourselves in the music and get sweaty and jump around," she says, "feeling like you've been on an emotional roller coaster." ◆

SMART ADVICE

SOME SAGE TIPS ON LIFE FOR LOCAL GRADUATES

THE REAL WORLD: This year's graduates should ready themselves for an AI world.

Welcome, students of Emersan College. And congratulations on winning the lawsuit brought by Emerson. I agree with the judge—there's no way anyone could possibly confuse this place with Emerson. I do give you guys credit for referring to Charlesgate Park as "the quad" and holding classes under the overpass. You're a resourceful bunch, and I say that as someone who's also spoken at both Brabson and MIIT. I'm sure that once that degree is on the wall of your unlicensed strip-mall dental office, nobody's going to care where you went or what your GPA was or how many felonies you have. What they'll care about is whether you're good at your job, and frankly I doubt your choice of college could've helped you much there.

Now that you're heading out into the job market, you're probably anxious, wondering how to make yourself useful these next 40 years or so. Some people say to do what you love, but if that were true then half of you would get jobs in quality control at the Jergens factory. I'm looking at you, Lance! Just kidding. There's no way half of you will have jobs. I'm thinking a quarter, at best, and that's if we count those of you who will spend a few hours a week unclogging toilets for TaskRabbit.

The main challenge is that you can no longer plan on a job being around forever. Consider plastic straws. The Lyons Group and plenty of other restaurants across the city are tossing them aside for bamboo. So here you were with a safe job in plastic straws, like your father and his father before him, and the next thing you know you're getting evicted and your wife's running off with the bamboo salesman.

But there's always a bright side, and I'm hopeful that this move will at least solve the riddle of the black cocktail straws. Do you just stir with them? Are you supposed to drink out of them? They're too narrow for that, but if you use two at once it's kind of fun. Like, society is saying, "You're not supposed to drink out of this straw! It's very short, and the diameter is insufficient!" And you say, "Oh yeah? Watch this. I'll just stoop over and use two at once so that when a single grain of pepper clogs one barrel, this bloody mary is still flowin'." Total badass move. Well, maybe they'll have silly little bamboo straws, too. But the bendy straw? I just have to assume we're saying goodbye to that.

Hopefully you didn't major in single-serve petrochemical-based vacuum cylinder production. (Yes, I'm still talking about straws.) But even if you did, fear not, because it doesn't really matter what your major is. How many history majors do you think become historians? How many economics majors become economists? I can't even count the number of friends who got a degree in large animal medicine with an equine emphasis and never went near a horse! And then, look at me. I majored in hospitality management but ended up working in a haberdashery for a few years before joining the French Foreign Legion. So don't worry about your major, especially because it's too late now anyway.

Enough about jobs. What about life? A lot of people will tell you to learn karate, but I disagree. I think you should just learn to run really fast. Anyone can do it, especially when you're being chased by a karate person. And maybe you should think about why this karate expert is mad at you in the first place. A lot of these martial arts conflicts can be avoided if you simply refrain from saying stuff like, "Hey, nice bathrobe, freak! Did you steal that from the Loser Spa? Your belt doesn't even match." But if the belt does match, white on white, then the punches hurt less, I've found.

Some people say to do what you love, but if that were true then half of you would get jobs in quality control at the Jergens factory.

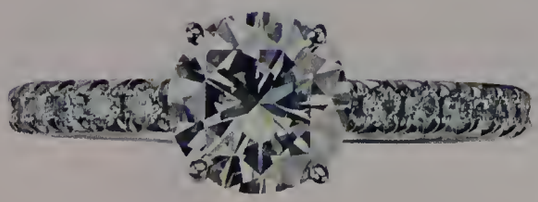
What other advice do I have? Let's see: Use a phone with a removable battery and never power it up except to make calls. Trust no one. Don't take the same route on consecutive days—oops, I'm sorry. This isn't my speech. These are notes for my upcoming trip to Fort Lauderdale. Which is, ah, a vacation! A fun vacation that has nothing to do with my time in the French Foreign Legion.



So, what now? I think you should take a year off and be a lift operator in Colorado. Just live, you know? Do some goat yoga and make mood boards for pop-up origami stores. Years from now, when you're an indentured servant on the AI ranch, you'll wistfully look back at this time as a carefree lark, full of excitement and free of constant corporal punishment administered by the six-armed spank-bots. Just enjoy yourself. And if you're really not ready to face reality, go to grad school. I hear there's a great hospitality management program at PU. ◆

STATED AFFAIR

SOUND ADVICE ON A CHEATING HUSBAND, SOLO TRIPS AND A LONG LOST LOVE INTEREST

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

Two weeks ago, I married a man who I have dated for 14 years. I have a 12-year-old son with him. I just learned that my best friend of 30 years has been having an affair with him—and she was my maid of honor! He's trying to save the marriage. What should I do? Well, this is living proof that life is complicated. My first thought in your situation is that you should try to work through your upsetting news and stay with your marriage. Someone very smart once told me that marriage has three distinct phases, if you stick it out long enough. The first phase is sex, and it seems you've been through this initial part. The second is phase is children, and you're into that now. The third phase I call cozy. It's when you're used to each other, comfortable in so many daily ways. This might be the best phase of all. You're familiar with the bumps and the laughs and the individual peculiarities. Cozy. In my view, this is mostly much better and easier than going it alone. Loneliness is a big problem in society.

You imply that your husband wants to stay with you and your son. I know you feel betrayed by two people, but my answer—based on a lifetime of observing human nature and writing about it—is that if your husband is honestly contrite, you should reach an accommodation. Vote for companionship. Vote for cozy.

BROKEN HEART: [illegible]ng a cheating husband c[illegible]ld be tougher than you think

I am traveling out of state in the coming weeks for a music festival. I have always loved traveling and always loved live events. This time, however, I'm going by myself. I'm a little nervous about being so far from the familiarities of home without my friends and family. Do you have any advice on prepping for this big trip? You obviously enjoy one or several of the bands or performers playing at the festival, so you will already have the potential for making many new friends who have similar tastes. As for traveling away from home, it's about time to get out of your comfort zone. Strangers you meet and bond with over the bands, the booze and whatever else helps you relax will help you with any unexpected problems. Just avoid anyone who wants to take you to parties several miles away because they can't believe what an interesting person you are. But mostly, in a crowd of believers, you can, as they say, trust in the kindness of strangers. It can help as well if you wear something a little different, like red glasses or a green Greta Garbo T-shirt. Never be afraid to be original. Once you realize what a good time you can have playing "away games," you'll never stop doing it.

Someone very smart once told me that marriage has three distinct phases.

When I went to college, I met a lot of cool and interesting people from all different walks of life. There was this one girl—call her Sam—with who I was particularly close. We remained good friends after I graduated, but life threw some curveballs and I went through some personal issues. I couldn't help but notice who stayed in my life when I was struggling—and who didn't. Sam was not one of the people who stayed in it, but she's always on my mind. Should I reach out and try to reconnect with Sam now that I am in a better place or call it a day? If someone from your past keeps popping up into corners of your mind, never look back and say, "I should have tried to find her." But pay attention to your phrasing if you email or text. Do not remind her that she let you down. Pretend it never happened or fazed you. Romance can be a game, with the players as actors and actresses. What you want to do is pop back up in her life and make her sorry she isn't in your life anymore. Plant a seed. Tell her how happy your life is, how much you like your job and how you've been encouraged to "think big." Imply you're on the road to adventures and soon climbing the ladder of success. Sometimes the old cliches are true, including "all's fair in love and war." ◆

Soroff On / Rachel Platten

KEEPING UP THE FIGHT

THE SINGER SOUNDS OFF ON FAN ENCOUNTERS, WINNING AN EMMY AND MINDY KALING'S CAST PARTIES

SINGER/SONGWRITER RACHEL PLATTEN, 36, WAS raised in Newton. After graduating from Buckingham, Browne & Nichols School, she attended Trinity College and then moved to New York to pursue her musical career. She played coffee shops and small venues while honing her craft, releasing two indie albums before eventually penning the anthem "Fight Song," the 2014 mega-hit that brought her stardom and earned her a Daytime Emmy Award. Her new album, Waves, continues her strong independent streak. She lives with her husband in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Did you set out to write an anthem when you wrote "Fight Song"?
RACHEL PLATTEN: No. I just personally needed that song. It was for me. I was struggling with believing in myself. I knew I wanted to do music, even though it seemed impossible. I was 31 at the time. Everyone told me it was too late. But I'm just stubborn and I refuse to give up. I had this idea in my heart that I was meant to give this message. But it seemed like an insane person's thought. I'm thinking I'm going to save the world when I'm playing to five people at a sports bar.

Who have you been compared to that you like the most? Sia, I think. People say the tone of my voice is similar, and I love that comparison. I think she's outrageously talented.

Person you want to collaborate with? Chance the Rapper. One hundred percent. I would die to work with him.

You must have had some unbelievable fan encounters. Is there one that stands out? It happens so frequently, and I'm so happy for it. Every time I do a show, I hear a new incredible story. But recently, there was a little girl who had cancer that was almost inoperable but they were going to try, and she was like 6. Her family said they played "Fight Song" nonstop before she went into surgery and it was the first thing she wanted to hear when she woke up. It's really humbling. There's a couple of really hardcore fans who call themselves the Plattenums, which I think is really cute. They created a book they called Chicken Soup for the Plattenum Soul. It's stories about how they've helped each other. It's like a sisterhood and they support each other unconditionally. They did something incredible for one of them who couldn't afford a ticket to see me. They did a crowd-fund and flew her from England to see me.

Favorite venue you've ever played? I think the Staples Center in LA. When I was struggling as a songwriter, I lived close to downtown and I'd drive by it. So when I drove there to sing it was just incredible. I did two sold-out nights opening for Tim McGraw and Faith Hill.

Worst venue? On my first tour—which I'm not really sure you could call a tour—my drummer and I were playing the bar scene in New York City. We made up a fake agent email address and this person who believed in us found some smoky pub in Pittsburgh. The stage wasn't really a stage. It was a crawl space. I was crouching while we performed. Part of the deal was that we got dinner, which was like chicken in water. And afterward, we were like, "That was the best! We're on tour!" [Laughs.]

Favorite talk show to appear on? I'm gonna have to go with Good Morning America, because I won an Emmy. Now it's new anchors though and they have no idea who I am, but on red carpets, I'm like, "Yeah, we won an Emmy together!" And they're like, "We're trying to find someone famous."

"I wanted to do music, even though it seemed impossible.... Everyone told me it was too late. But I'm just stubborn."

Weirdest place you've been when one of your songs came on? Oh! I was in Korea in Pyeongchang for the Olympics and we were shopping in a mall. Very random. All of a sudden, "Perfect for You," a song off my new album, came on. I was like, "Oh, this is a good song. Oh, my God—it's mine!"

If you were an artist who went by one name only, what would it be and why? Let's ask The Improper Bostonian readers what they think. Comment on social media and give me ideas. I have none, and mine would be so lame.

Would you ever be a judge/mentor on The Voice or America's Got Talent? One hundred percent. I was a mentor on American Idol. I loved it so much. I took it very seriously. I really wanted the girl to get as much as she could. I wanted her to see some steps that I had to take that maybe she didn't have to. I loved passing on the 16 years that I had to learn. I loved the possibility of helping her skip some of that. I love to be a mentor.

Where do you keep your Emmy? It's on my piano. But sometimes when I work out, I don't have a heavy enough weight so I'll use it. It's really heavy! I also have an iHeartRadio award and they're equal weight, so I use them for bench presses. It's so fuckin' Boston of me.

Ever write a lyric you regret? There's a song called "Speechless" on my record Wildfire. I just get a little embarrassed singing it live. It's sexual and it's not really like me to write around onstage. It works for some artists, but it's not my strength, and I have a lot of young, little girl fans. It feels weird.

Thing about BB&N that you loved the most? I did love the singing group. Now I'm going to be made fun of. Our name was the Nightingales, which is so dorky, but I loved going to practice voice. I just assumed that everyone loved drama class and singing.

Are you the only pop star they've produced? No. There are lots of famous people. Mindy Kaling was in the Nightingales when I was and we went on a trip to Spain together and we were roommates. She taught me something major and womanly on that trip, although I can't remember what. She also had incredible parties—like epic cast parties. She called my mom, who was not happy about letting a freshman go. Mindy convinced her it would be a really solid, wholesome good time. [Laughs.]

Favorite thing about Newton Center? Crystal Lake, by far. I walk around it whenever I'm home and I get so much peace. My whole life, I've gone there.

Favorite country you've toured in? Maybe Japan. Tokyo just blew my mind. It's so cool.

How long before your Grammy? What a sweet question! Hopefully soon. I've envisioned it and I hope that it happens and I do want it. I think it's something I could get. I can see it and visualize it and I hope it does happen. ◆

GRAYBARNS

194 Perry Ave., Norwalk, Connecticut
(283-489-9000) graybarns.com

Guests who break bread at the Tavern at GrayBarns start dinner with a sourdough baguette made by Flour Salt Water's Rob VanKeuren. "He doesn't use any leaveners, any bleached flours—everything is naturally fermented. He's got a starter that's from Italy 90 years ago," executive chef Ben Freemole says, mentioning just one history-steeped aspect of the revamped inn and restaurant in Norwalk, Connecticut. The converted 19th-century textile factory was a popular spot in the '50s and '60s—drawing Golden Age Hollywood stars like Lauren Bacall, Spencer Tracy and even Elizabeth Taylor and Eddie Fisher for their honeymoon—before it reopened in August after a two-year renovation that also included a rustic remake of the inn's former 1920s speakeasy.

"We take classic food you would serve for dinner parties or at home or just out of your garden and we try to put a restaurant spin on it—nothing too pretentious, nothing too precious. It's food that's good to share, and has some memory involved in it," Freemole says of the menu that changes every few weeks. When it comes to VanKeuren's sesame semolina bread, "It reminds everybody of those really bad breadsticks from the past, but it's super, super delicious." Tuna tartare dressed in olive oil, shallot and lemon nods to one chef's first job in a kitchen, and they also created a clam toast inspired by Pepe's pizza. One version of the cheeseburger—the patty's grind made with 20-percent bone marrow for some "oomph"—included pickled green tomatoes, bearnaise sauce and shredded lettuce. "It kind of reminded everyone of going to McDonald's as a child," Freemole says.

But GrayBarns' sourcing goes far beyond the golden arches. A nearby farm supplies fresh eggs and grows radish and sunflower shoots, shiso and pea tendrils to garnish dishes. The restaurant's expanding its on-site garden beds from six to 24 to plant sour clover, tomatoes, haricots verts and marjoram, with staff taking turns tending to them. Then it's off to the farmers market, a habit that Freemole picked up while working at New York's shuttered molecular gastronomy playground wd-50, where the staff frequented Union Square every week. Says Freemole: "We came back with taxis full of vegetables."

GrayBarn's colonial accommodations are far removed from that bustling city, but its six suites are stocked with luxurious modern comforts—Frette linens, Nest thermostats, heated travertine floors and Le Labo toiletries—that live among Corona typewriters and reclaimed wood. The property's original Windsor chairs were updated with black lacquer, and Tavern guests can relax in one by the bar or terrace overlooking the Silvermine River and Guthrie Pond or move to the library for after-dinner drinks. Come back for breakfast and lunch—or grab one of VanKeuren's croissants instead. Better yet, this fall the inn is slated to open Mercantile, a country store stocked with home goods, homemade provisions and a cafe and bakery, so you can take a taste of the retreat home with you.

There's plenty to learn about the grounds of the Ocean House. There's direct access to a private beach with posh cabanas. There's a croquet lawn, shuffleboard court and putting green. There's a 12,000-square-foot spa with seasonal treatments and ingredients. There's 49 rooms and 18 suites perched at the coastline. And, yes, there's even a view off the terrace of Taylor Swift's $17 million seaside mansion, where she stages her July Fourth blowouts.

But there's plenty of learning to be had inside the Ocean House, specifically at the two-year-old Center for Wine and Culinary Arts, which has a couple of new faces leading it since this winter. Erin Swain, director of wine education, holds a nightly 30-minute class for guests, while Ryan Beaudoin, food forager and director of culinary education, leads two daily 30-minute cooking classes. Taking advantage of Ocean House's 8,000-bottle cellar that has 1,700 different wines, Swain selects the 5 pm event from a list of nearly 50 themes such as Wine 101, A Look at Etymology and Aromas vs. Bouquets—a favorite class that includes an aroma kit to isolate different smells. In that course, Swain also taps local ingredients from Beaudoin such as toasted marshmallow and lemon zest to give the guests a full range of smells.

"We make them really interactive," Swain says, noting that she's even based a class around the hit movie Somm before then screening the film for the guests. Beaudoin offers a similar customization on the culinary end, creating courses on oyster tastings and organizing trips to the inn's nearby farm, which includes goats, chickens, beehives and lots of veggies. The farm and onsite garden are also tapped for Ocean House's Coast, a fine-dining restaurant that debuted last year and only uses ingredients within 100 miles of the property.

"We try to keep it as seasonal as possible, utilizing only what's available to us," Beaudoin says. "Not just delivering the trends, but also setting new trends and introducing our guests to new trends and cuisine."

But always leave room for dessert: There's a shop called Below Deck on the path to the beach that serves made-to-order mini doughnuts, 10 flavors of gelato and milkshakes such as Ocean House's Kitchen Sink with chocolate gelato, chocolate sauce, caramel sauce, Kit Kat, Reese's Pieces, M&Ms and whipped cream. Sounds like a song from Ocean House's famous pop-star neighbor: "Wildest Dreams."

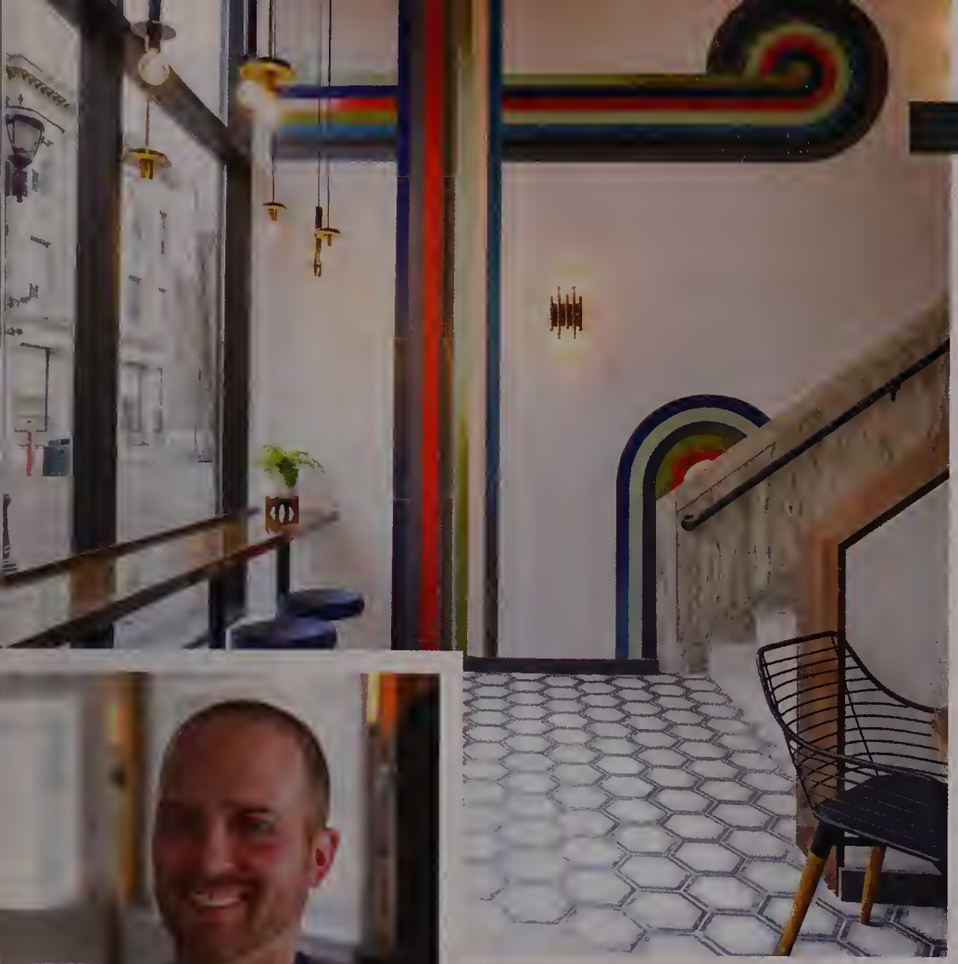
MOUNTAIN VIEW GRAND

101 Mountain View Road, Whitefield, New Hampshire
(855-837-2100) mountainviewgrand.com

The history of this 141-room inn in Whitefield, New Hampshire, dates back more than 150 years, and its wine cellar was renovated nearly two decades ago. But it wasn't until this year that a tiny, 12-seat room off that wine cellar came into its own.



"It's a room that we can just dedicate to pushing culinary limits as far as northern New England goes. We offer it not just as a room, but as an experience. It can be up to 12 people. They can eat off a couple of prix fixe menus, or if they want to let us drive, we can create a super-micro-seasonal menu just for that party. Or they have the option for me to call them and find out what they are interested in, so it's completely customized," executive chef Nathan Varney says. "We were using it for private dining, but there was no wine in the room. It was all glass, and you could see into the wine cellar. We had a room that hadn't grown into its own body yet. It was just very awkward, like a teenager, and we didn't know what to do with it."

The dining experience takes place on a custom-made wooden table that sports tree stumps as legs and includes dishes like the imaginative forest floor that combines branches collected from the property, a housemade tea and dry ice. It promises to be a bit more avant-garde than the rest of Mountain View Grand's culinary settings, which includes the casual clubhouse as well as the Harvest Tavern and the 1865 Wine Cellar. That 6,000-bottle cellar features a four-course menu for guests 15 and older with dishes like foie gras ganache served with pickled Cape cranberries, charred bread and maple as well as duck confit with confit apple and potatoes. Despite their subtle differences, all of the spots hew closely to Varney's farm-to-table ethos.

"You should be treating a carrot with the same respect that you would treat a filet of beef," Varney says. "Both were raised by a farmer and both take a lot of energy to happen."

It's easy for guests to have a similar respect for the entire property, which includes views of the White Mountains and a waterfall terrace from many of the rooms and luxury suites. You can relax with spa services that range from a wild lime scalp treatment to a seaweed gel body wrap or you can get moving in the fitness center, indoor/outdoor pools and even a 9-hole golf course—all the easier to work up an appetite.

HOTEL SALEM

209 Essex St., Salem, Massachusetts
(978-451-4950) thehotelsalem.com

When the rooftop bar opens at the Hotel Salem this June, chef Justin Perdue pictures his guests savoring oysters and some frosé while they drink in sweeping views of Salem Harbor.

As the only rooftop bar in Salem, the Roof will soon join Counter as the second eatery at the 44-room boutique hotel, which opened in November and is owned by the Amesbury-based Lark Hotels. Built in 1895 on the city's pedestrian mall, the stately building is the former home of Newmark's department store, and its past as a high-end clothing store inspires the retro, midcentury modern vibe of the airy communal spaces and the accommodations—from budget-friendly micro-rooms to luxe suites—with towering ceilings, warm wood and jewel-toned accents.

Since joining Lark Hotels as the group chef in 2016, Perdue has helmed the direction of hotel menus across New England. The modern American dinner fare at Counter also winks to the building's history with spins on dishes found in counter-service restaurants in the department stores of decades past. The duck confit on sourdough served with potato leek soup is meant as an upscale version of the classic soup-and-sandwich combo.

The warmer months led to the menu's first major refresh since the January opening with a transition to lighter plates and shareable items. Perdue is also rolling out a pie menu featuring a riff on baked Alaska, served in an individual pie shell. "We're thinking about doing a strawberry ice cream with lemon curd," Perdue says. "And then with the bruleed marshmallow, I think especially for the summer it's gonna be off the hook."

While the Counter boasts a luxe retro renaissance, up at the Roof, the party will be all about the present, with an unfussy open space. "It's a fun, playful place where people can hang out and have some oysters," Perdue says of the Roof, where the casual menu will showcase small plates like ceviche and tacos alongside frozen margaritas, Salem's first cocktail draft system and the aforementioned (and addictive) frosé—elder leaf and lavender is the kickoff flavor.

Alongside tempting tacos, Perdue is excited to showcase his guacamole, which he perfected while working at Topolobampo in Chicago with maestro of Mexican cuisine Rick Bayless. Guests can choose between pork belly or fried shrimp, or opt for the classic version with tomato, cilantro and a touch of sour cream. "It's got lime and cumin and just all those bright flavors that work in the summer, especially with a tall boy," Perdue says.

As for what to pair with that frosé, he recommends the snapper ceviche with passion fruit vinegar, candied ginger and smoked almonds. That duo is worth the ferry trip from Boston alone.

WOODSTOCK INN

14 The Green, Woodstock, Vermont
(888-338-2745) woodstockinn.com

Tucked away in the Green Mountains, Vermont's Woodstock Inn is embracing its love for farm-to-table dining even more with the renovation of its Red Barns at Kelly Way Gardens. The two 1800s-era barns sit on the inn's 3-acre organic farm, which will make use of its 200 varieties of produce for classes, culinary demonstrations and themed dinners taking place from May to October.

Executive chef Rhys Lewis (formerly of the Williamsburg Inn) helms the happenings in the new 11,000-square-foot kitchen studio, featuring Bosch double wall ovens and rustic decor crafted from reclaimed materials, including salvaged chandeliers and countertops made from wood repurposed from bowling alley lanes. On Sundays in July and August, Lewis will lead the Red Barn Dinner Series, planning three courses of seasonally inspired fare for up to 44 guests in tandem with local businesses such as WhistlePig Rye Whiskey and the specialty farms in the Vermont Cheese Council. "Vermont's really made of a collection of small artisans," says general manager Gary Thulander. "We can all get together to create a really unique experience." These intimate gatherings allow guests a front-row seat to watch chef Lewis in action and listen to the featured guest speaker.

Lewis will also team up with master gardener Benjamin Pauly for the weekly Garden Tour and Tasting Series, starting in June. During the two-hour event, Pauly will give guests the dirty details on topics like organic gardening and planting for pollinators, followed by a culinary demonstration that highlights one garden-grown produce served three different ways. With crops such as asparagus, berries and the inn's own 55 tomato varieties, participants will have the opportunity to experience a range of seasonal fare.

And the Red Barns aren't the only thing new at the Woodstock Inn. All 142 rooms and suites were refreshed and refurnished, providing a relaxing retreat for guests after they enjoy a flower arranging class or the inn's new Elemental Bike Park, which showcases 6.2 miles of mountain biking tracks that cyclists can race down starting in July. "Woodstock is a four-season place," Thulander says. "It really provides that sense of place and personalized service that New England is known for."

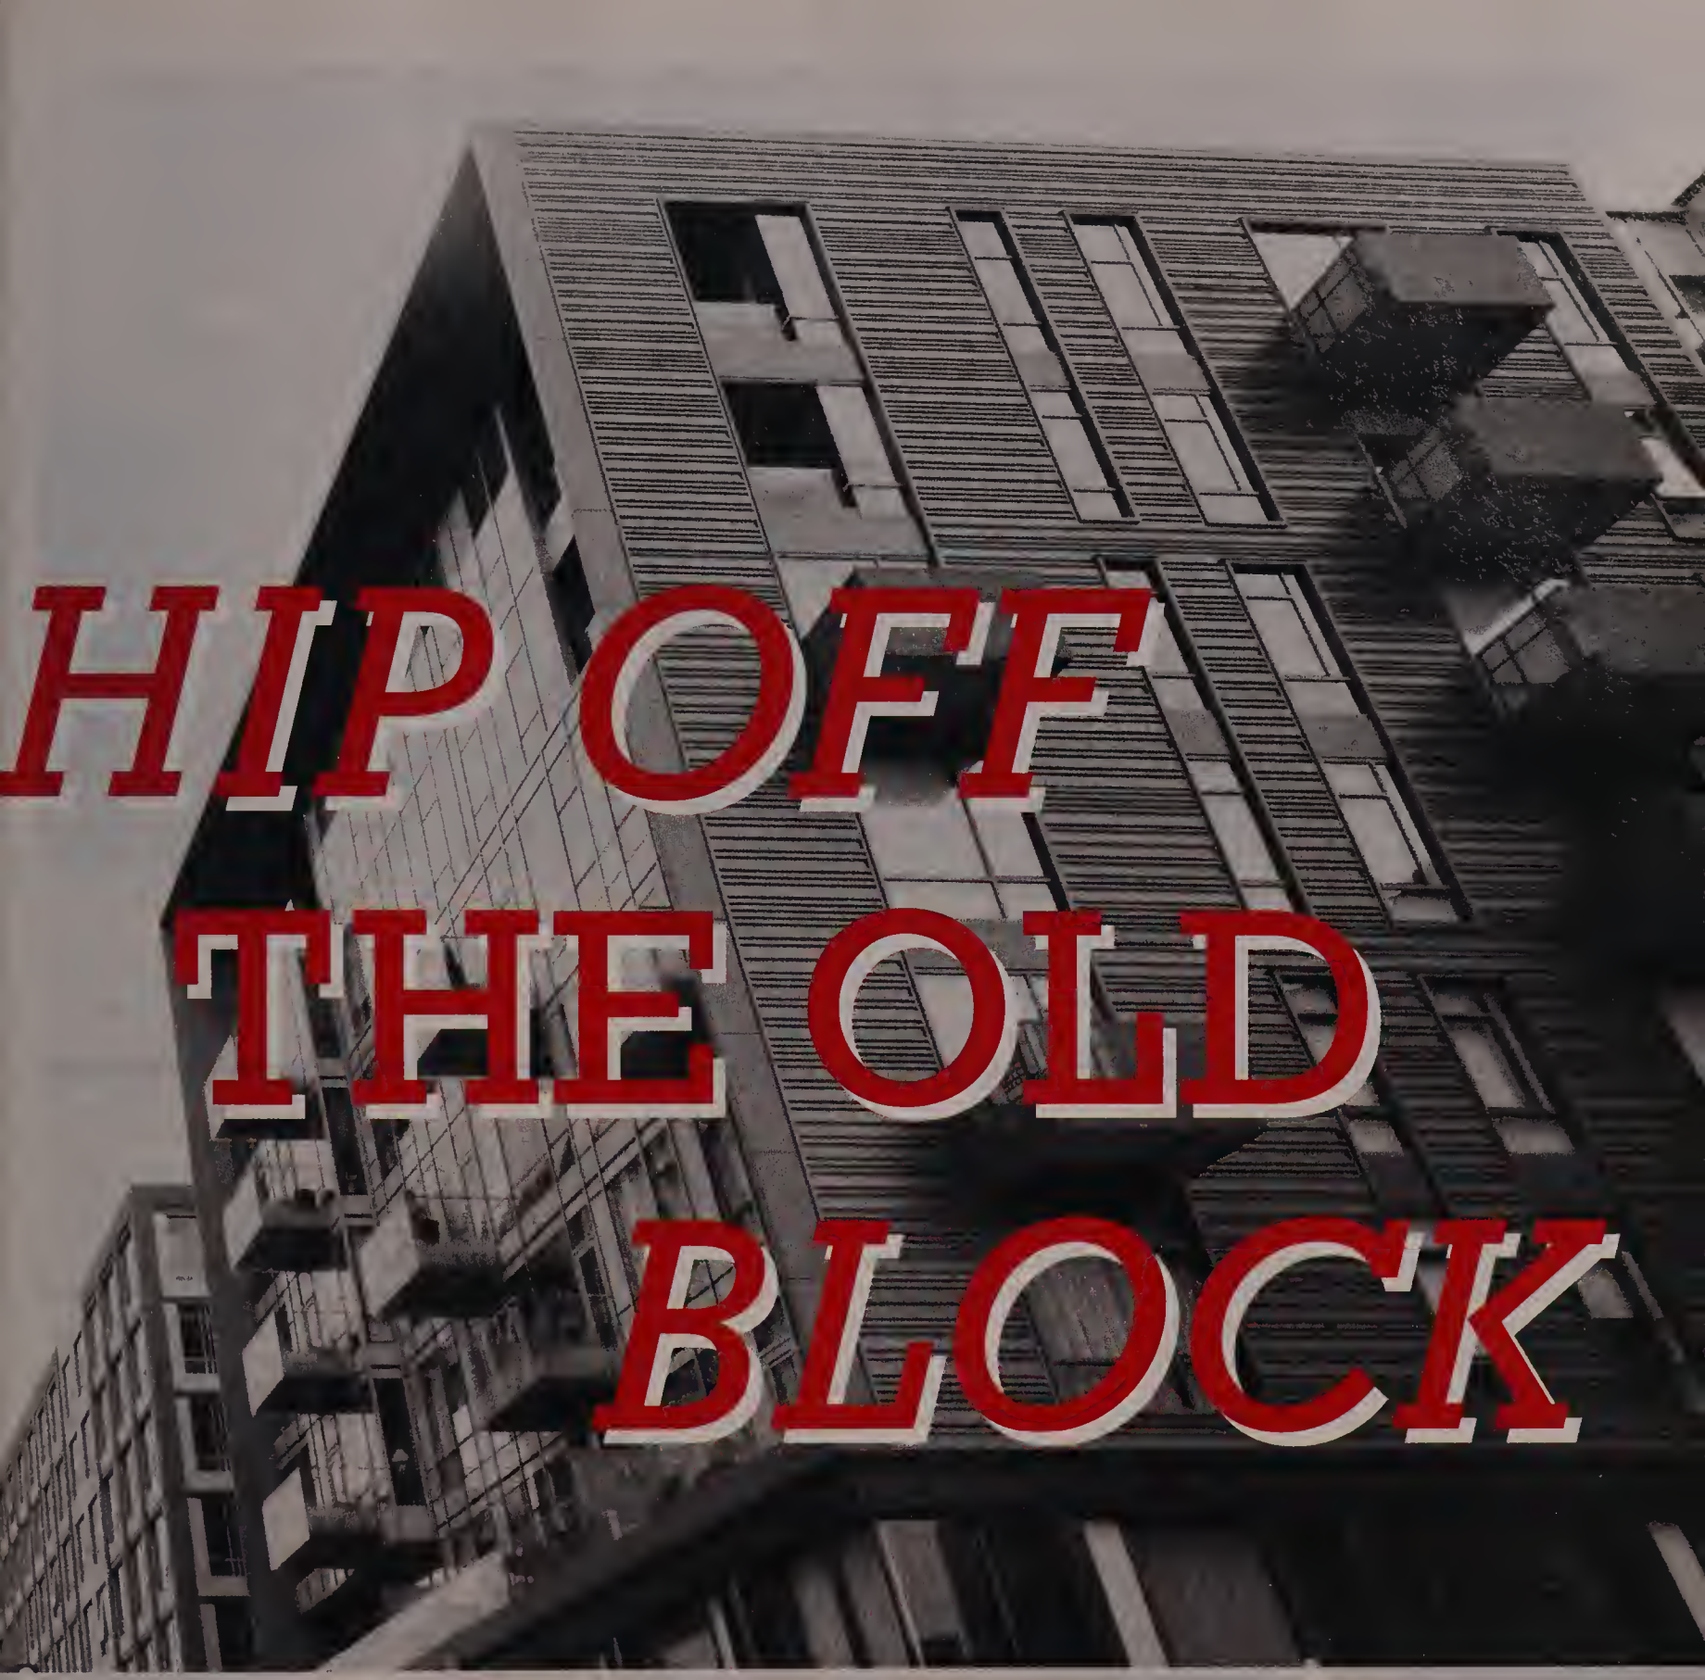
THE GRACE WHITE BARN INN

37 Beach Ave., Kennebunk, Maine
(207-967-2321) gracehotels.com/whitebarninn

Fresh off a culinary makeover in November from new executive chef Matthew Padilla, the Grace White Barn Inn in Kennebunk, Maine, is ready for its closeup. With a prix fixe menu that is modified weekly and a new customizable dining program in place, Padilla is refreshing the palate of this New England institution.

"The White Barn has a lot of tradition," Padilla says. "We wanted to stay true to the classics but also my goal was to modernize it a bit, so I brought a lot of my newer techniques."



The 26-room coastal inn, which has been in business for more than 150 years, features two barns from the 1820s that make up the landmark's restaurant. While the format of the four-course prix fixe menu remains recognizable to longtime patrons, Padilla and his team change the menu weekly depending on what ingredients are in season from their local purveyors.

Padilla also recently created a few new dining experiences such as a chef's tasting menu based upon diners' preferences and allergies, as well as private cooking classes for guests to recreate items from the menu. These dishes include a mixture of new favorites, like the boudin blanc-stuffed Cavendish quail with Brussels sprouts, cauliflower and mustard seeds, and familiar staples, such as the beet agnolotti made with Boucher blue cheese, roasted beets and hazelnut.

The bar program—spearheaded by food and beverage director Hugo Aguirre—features cocktails highlighting seasonal ingredients like the White Barn Cosmopolitan made with Cold River vodka from Freeport, Maine, white cranberry juice, St-Germain and lime. The inn also utilizes St-Germain liqueur in the welcome drink that guests receive upon arrival—an iced chamomile infusion flavored with fresh lemon juice and elderflower syrup.

"This is kind of a new beginning for the next step in the life of the White Barn," Padilla says. "I'm excited for where we're going—I want to be in line with the best restaurants in the country."

As shiny new buildings pop up along Harrison Avenue and 20-somethings invade weekend festivals, artists cling to their hope that SoWa district won't lose too much of its soul.

When AREA founder David Guerra was searching for a brick-and-mortar headquarters for his multidisciplinary art initiative—first launched from his South End apartment, where he tested the model by hosting hip happenings—SoWa seemed like an obvious choice.

After all, AREA is most interested in showcasing emerging artists creating edgy and innovative works in all mediums, particularly people of color and other underrepresented communities "not always reflected in the Boston arts scene," Guerra says. He's been fulfilling that promise since AREA opened its doors in December at 460 Harrison Ave., the latest of dozens of ground-floor galleries nestled among the art district's industrial-chic condo buildings. So far the space has hosted intimate, conceptual dinners with Boston star chefs, interactive events where guests use wearable technology to engage with artwork through movement and sound, and exciting exhibitions like the just-opened Transparent?, an exploration of personal and political themes by artists from Guerra's native Cuba.

AREA fits into the popular narrative that SoWa offers Boston's best arts scene, and is strong evidence its coveted status remains intact. SoWa is currently home to 300 working artist studios and Boston's largest concentration of contemporary galleries, according to GTI Properties, the neighborhood's dominant real estate developer.

"It's transformed from a downtrodden area into one of the most vibrant communities in the city," says Debby Krim of the SoWa Artists Guild.

But as the upscale-trending locale writes new chapters in its grit-to-glitz story, its reputation for destination-worthy fine art becomes increasingly eclipsed by an association with weekend fairs, food truck fleets and crowded beer fests. Some longtime locals are now wondering how long art can remain at the beating heart of SoWa.

The "south of Washington Street" stretch of the South End received its catchy, modern marketing-friendly moniker in the late '90s from GTI. Founder Mario Nicosia scooped up millions of square feet of abandoned brick factories he successfully used to cultivate the area's arts scene and build up a bona fide sanctuary for gallery-strollers. Long before then, SoWa streets sold the kind of spunky urban rawness that invariably appeals to creatives. Known by some as the New York Streets, the area was populated largely by artists—many of them struggling squatters in semi-vacant buildings—as well as public housing tenants and residents at Pine Street Inn, a long-standing homeless shelter barely into its current 99-year lease. Old-timers eagerly tell tales involving grimier strains of charm, higher crime and lower rents.

Today, that history is hard to see. With exponential acceleration in recent years—and no signs of slowing anytime soon—SoWa has transformed into a booming enclave for the very-upwardly mobile. GTI paved the way, renovating its portfolio of manufacturing-era properties into artist lofts and galleries, high-end shops and buzzy restaurants like Gaslight Brasserie du Coin and Cinquecento.

"The transformation has been nothing short of incredible," says Seth Woods, founder of those restaurants' parent company, the Aquitaine Group. A New York native, Woods was attracted to the "grit" of SoWa and saw the potential in Nicosia's plans for the district. With its 2009 opening, Gaslight helped expand the literal boundaries of the South End's booming dining scene.

More recently, expensive doors have opened at mixed-use developments like Ink Block and Troy Boston, the kind of practically self-sustainable communities where you can rent a $3,000/month studio apartment upstairs, take a $27 yoga class at a ground-level tenant and refuel with salad bowls from neighboring Whole Foods, official flag-planter of gentrified 'hoods.

Urban redevelopment is itself an art, and right now, deep-pocketed investors are sculpting an entirely new face for this part of the South End. As with all art, the result is open to interpretation. And in speaking with neighborhood gallerists, artists and other creatives, it becomes clear that most folks view the evolution of SoWa from two different angles.

SETH WOODS

Some see a hub of exciting change and inspired dynamism: "It's fantastic; I see nothing but new opportunities," says milliner Marie Galvin. For more than a decade, she has kept a design studio and boutique among the art-retail spaces in 450 Harrison Ave., a massive GTI-owned building. "Harrison Avenue used to be sketchy. Now it's so posh," says the hard-working hat-maker, whose business booms around the Kentucky Derby. The more bustling the neighborhood becomes, the more prospective clients might see her street-side, Parisian-style window display filled with mannequins modeling her handcrafted high-fashion fascinators.

Others see a loss of authenticity and a squeezing-out of the artistic energy that originally fueled the district. "It's just so slick and commercial now," says Jennifer Moses, director of Kingston Gallery, located just a few doors down from Galvin's millinery. Kingston, founded downtown in 1982 and the second-oldest artist-run gallery in Boston, moved to SoWa in 1997, when Moses says the scene appealed to fringe-flirting artists seeking an avant-garde alternative to the Newbury Street establishment. Ironically, a number of longtime Newbury Street institutions, like Alpha Gallery and International Poster Gallery, have recently relocated to SoWa as the even pricier Back Bay hemorrhages art spaces.

As with all art, the result is open to interpretation. And in speaking with neighborhood gallerists, artists and other creatives, it becomes clear that most folks view the evolution of SoWa from two different angles.

Overall, SoWa creatives share positive perspectives on GTI. They praise the developer for fostering SoWa's arts scene and continuing to offer artists below-market rents. There's some grousing, though, that the longtime landlord is playing harder ball since other developers started descending in the area, introducing rent hikes and lease stipulations, like a requirement that tenants stay open on Sundays to accommodate the thick throngs of the seasonal SoWa Open Market.

Kingston Gallery sticks to a long-held business plan of covering expenses mainly through member dues, making its space less reliant on sales than other galleries and freeing artists to exhibit more challenging and experimental works. Still, Moses is among several gallerists reporting that area artists are increasingly whispering about a future in even more affordable East Boston, home to underdeveloped industrial swaths (sound familiar?) and burgeoning art-world potential. This summer, the Institute of Contemporary Art opens a 15,000-square-foot, $10 million satellite location in a former Eastie copper pipe factory.

"It has been the case, for a very long time, that artists sort of make a neighborhood vital and then get displaced," Moses says.

That reciprocal relationship between financially fragile artists and the well-heeled, culture-loving clients who can afford to keep them afloat—a weird dance of interdependence, trust and tension—is not a new story. What's happening in SoWa, some say, is just another manifestation of that familiar tale.

"Artists depend on wealthy people even while we poke them in the eye," says James Hull, an established Boston artist, art educator and museum installation technician whose resume includes converting an Orange Line MBTA station into the one-time Green Street Gallery. Hull lives in Laconia Lofts, a 2000-built pioneer of SoWa luxury living, and is the president of its ground-floor gallery. He scored his space through the "little miracle" of a Boston Redevelopment Authority initiative that designated certain units as affordable live-work lofts for artists.

Hull says without such programs, many fellow creatives couldn't afford to live in the arts-embracing South End.

Then again, "hobnobbing above your station and class" is a historic hallmark of the artist experience, Hull says, recalling the relationships between poor Renaissance artists and the wealthy families who paid them for portraits and frescos. It's not yet clear whether the new money pouring into SoWa will result in the same kind of patronage the Pope paid.

The Abbey Group, which is currently developing a $1 billion tech-and-life science campus for the 5.6-acre SoWa site of the former Boston Flower Exchange, has included a cultural center in its plans, though details are scarce. At now-leasing 345 Harrison, where rates start at $2,800 for studios, a diverse art collection will be a "signature design element" of the building, according to a spokesperson. So far, significant commissioned works include installations from artists based in Cambridge and Michigan. Some SoWa creatives say they've been surprised to not receive more contact from developers about partnering specifically with neighborhood-based artists.

"As more buildings get built, it would be great if they utilized the creative people who are right here," says Patrick Planeta, whose design group and fine art brokerage practice is housed in a former mill building on Albany Street, where, he says, affordability has been protected by an art-champion landlord. "There's so much talent already in the neighborhood, and I don't think they always [utilize it]."

"Hobnobbing above your station and class" is a historic hallmark of the artist experience, Hull says, recalling the relationships between poor Renaissance artists and the wealthy families who paid them for portraits and frescos.

The recently opened AC Hotel at Ink Block has its own art gallery; the current exhibition represents several South End artists. And Underground at Ink Block, a new park under the I-93 overpass, is covered in 150,000-square feet of mural walls painted by street artists tapped from near and far. The park will be activated with a calendar of happenings, including a Castle Island Brewing Co. beer garden slinging suds Thursday through Sunday from mid-May to mid-October.

Thanks to pedestrian-friendly side-streets, still-empty parcels and parking lots, SoWa has become a popular site for special events—many of them organized by GTI, which produces recurring activities like the SoWa Art Walk and that aforementioned hugely popular SoWa Open Market, a weekly sea of white tents where vendors hawk artisan wares, farmers market groceries and more. GTI even has a designated staff member, Aida Villarreal-Licona, dedicated to coordinating and marketing community and arts events. Villarreal-Licona is developing new initiatives, including a series of workshops designed to better connect residents with their artist neighbors.

Whether it comes from new developers or GTI's own events, the more activity in the neighborhood, the better for everyone, says Brad St. Amand, director of operations for GTI.

"It's great to see all the new developments going ahead," Amand says. "We like that, the more people that are here. A rising tide lifts all boats."

Plenty agree, including Stephen Silver, founder of the SoWa Artists Guild, and Debby Krim, who co-runs the nonprofit collective of 84 members (the largest number since the Guild's 2005 launch) housed inside 450 Harrison. They're enthusiastic cheerleaders for the transformation of SoWa, and understandably so. The area has blossomed brightly, they say, becoming a safer and more exciting arts district. The influx of new residents and festive events, including the guild's long-running First Fridays series, only enhance SoWa's vibrancy and encourage more visitors to studio spaces at 450 Harrison, where artists of every stripe—painters, photographers, sculptors, jewelers—ply their craft to share their passion and pay the rent, if not necessarily to make a living. Anecdotally speaking, Silver and Krim say the majority of guild members are older and established professionals, some semi-retired, for whom artmaking is a second career.

Where margins matter more for full-time artists, there's less consensus that a bigger, bustling SoWa is paying dividends. Some gallerists say that the hangout-friendly, weekend carnival-like atmosphere brings plenty of traffic, baby strollers and hip-seeking 20- and 30-somethings who spend cash on trinkets, craft beers and local restaurants but don't bother to explore the highbrow gallery spaces that gave SoWa its arts-district rep. Crowds are bigger but less, well, curated than the more motivated fine art buyers who previously descended on the district with purchasing intent.

"They're interested in the beer garden that's down there on Sunday and the food trucks," says Arlette Kayafas, whose Gallery Kayafas has been a SoWa stalwart since 2002. "I'm not being facetious and I'm not putting that down. I think that's an important part of the community. But they're not interested in coming through the door of a gallery. There's something about coming through the door of a gallery that seems unwelcoming to some, and that's the thing I would like to see overcome."

"What anchored the place in the beginning—the art—still has to be a priority," adds Kayafas, whose exhibits of always-powerful, frequently political and occasionally provocative work are far removed from SoWa's more commercial side.

Artistic integrity can be expensive overhead in an upmarket neighborhood, so even some highly lauded SoWa galleries, including Galeria Cubana, have recently closed their brick-and-mortar doors to reinvent as art-advisory and pop-up projects.

"The tenor of the neighborhood has changed," says Camilo Alvarez, who shuttered his Samsøn Projects in November after 14 years. Alvarez's SoWa gallery was widely considered one of the most exciting in Boston, highlighting the kind of diverse communities, experimental works and interdisciplinary approaches that garner national notice.

It's the same ethos adopted by promising newcomer AREA, which opened across the street mere weeks after Samsøn's shuttering.

Alvarez saved a subversive artistic statement for his final SoWa show: Immigrancy. He propped open the gallery door with a sculpture from queer Boston artist Steve Locke, a bright yellow road sign bearing the term "gentrification."

How to read it, exactly? Depends which way you're going: moving in, or moving on. ■

MOVIES

DISOBEDIENCE ★★★ Chilean director Sebastián Lelio follows up A Fantastic Woman with his English-language debut, a romantic drama that bears a passing resemblance to his Osear-winning foreign language film from last year. Another picture that ably demonstrates his amazing touch with actresses, Disobedience stands alongside 2013's Gloria, Lelio's intimate and empowering exploration of a woman finding herself. Although Rachel Weisz plays the film's central figure, Ronit Krushka, who returns to the Orthodox Jewish community in London that she fled for New York, it's Rachel MeAdams as her ehildhood best friend, Esti Kuperman, who's the conflicted standout. Lelio's latest, whieh he's adapted with Rebecca Lenkiewicz from Naomi Alderman's novel, starts with Ronit returning for the funeral of her estranged father, a beloved rabbi. As we gradually discover the reasons behind Ronit's departure and new life as a photographer, her relationships with both Esti and her husband, Dovid Kuperman (Boston native Alessandro Nivola), come into focus. Ronit is stunned to find that the two are married, and tensions mount as Dovid dutifully invites her to stay as the couple's houseguest. Soon, old passions come bubbling toward the surface, threatening to tear apart the society that shunned her long ago. Though a hugely sensual film, it lacks the subtleties of Lelio's earlier pictures. Nevertheless, it's worth seeing for the portraits of repressed emotions, particularly those of Esti, who's imbued with heartbreaking soul by McAdams. BLOCKERS* ★★★ While it might not bear his name, Judd Apatow's fingerprints are all over this comedy, which counts his wife (Leslie Mann) among its stars and Superbad scribes Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg among its producers. Hell, it'd be easy to dismiss this mix of budding sexuality and old-fashioned sentimentality as a female version of that 2007 hit about horny high school seniors, were it not for the affable performances that director Kay Cannon has gotten out of her game cast. That's right, Blockers is actually directed by a woman (edited by one, too!), which is an extreme rarity in today's industry. And although the original script was penned by a pair of men (brothers Brian and Jim Kehoe), Cannon (the writer of Pitch Perfect and its two sequels as well as a writer and producer on NBC's 30 Rock) clearly had a hand in the screenplay. But so did Rogen and Goldberg, which probably explains the reliance on raunch—and the drunken vomiting, too. Nevertheless, Cannon combats these genre prerequisites as best as she can, delivering a moderately well-balanced look at three girls (Kathryn Newton, Geraldine Viswanathan and Gideon Adlon) who've made a pact to lose their virginity on prom night. Then there's the girls' parents (Mann, John Cena and Ike Barinholtz) who will stop at nothing to cock block the boys (Graham Phillips, Miles Robbins and Jimmy Bellinger) who are selected to do the deeds. Unexpectedly, most of the characters come across with depth; none are outright idiots and each is given a moment to shine as the film reaches its sweet denouement. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

I Feel Pretty ★1/2 Screenwriting team Abby Kohn and Marc Silverstein dust off that old comedy trope of the traumatic head injury played for laughs in this hit-and-mostly-miss script they wrote for their co-directing debut. Filmed in and around Boston even though the movie's set in New York, you can at least distract yourself by trying to recognize some of the Beantown landmarks that inexplicably turn up in Manhattan. Perhaps it's the perfect metaphor for the identity crisis at the center of the story. Amy Schumer stars as Renee Bennett, an average woman who's crippled by low self-esteem. When she cracks her skull after falling from a stationary bike in spin class, she suddenly perceives that she's even more beautiful than supermodel Emily Ratajkowski, who plays another woman at SoulCycle. Instantly shedding her debilitating lack of confidence, she lands both her dream job and a boyfriend (comedian Rory Scovel), who's just as timid and self-conscious as she previously was. And while not many folks would consider a position as a receptionist to be the pinnacle of a career in fashion, Schumer really sells the transformation, especially during a scene set in a bar on "Coney Island" (i.e.: Salisbury Beach), where she enters a bikini contest. What could have been an embarrassing lowlight of the film instead turns into a comic triumph. Alas, it's a fleeting moment in a fairly unfunny film that conflates shallow beauty with success. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Rampage ★★1/2 Declaring this movie one of the better films derived from a video game is damning Brad Peyton's picture with faint praise. Unlike the recent Tomb Raider, it would appear that Rampage's four writers actually seemed to enjoy cooking up a juvenile story in this goofy-starring vehicle that allows the endlessly likable Dwayne Johnson to flex his muscles. The 1986 arcade title was little more than an excuse to grab a joystick and play as a cartoonish giant monster that leveled an endless succession of skyscrapers and fended off a military onslaught. It was great fun. Miraculously, the movie retains a similar visceral rush, even though you've been relegated to a passive role as an observer. Johnson plays an original character: Davis Okoye, a special-ops grunt-turned-primatologist, whose best friend is George, an albino gorilla he saved from poachers years earlier. George isn't a mindless King Kong clone like his arcade conterpart, however. Fluent in sign language that would make Jane Goodall blush, he enjoys flipping the bird at Davis and terrifying unsuspecting interns to amuse himself in the San Diego wildlife reserve where he lives. That is, until a diabolical plot causes him to grow exponentially, escape and then rage uncontrollably toward a destructive climax set in downtown Chicago that perfectly comprehends the core appeal of Rampage's classic arcade roots. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

RBG ★★1/2 If anyone deserved a better biographical treatment, it's the Supreme

justice at the center of Julie Cohen and Betsy West's RBG, which tells the life story of Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Frustratingly superficial, the documentary leaves you simply wanting to know more about the diminutive, opera-loving 85-year-old. Illustrated with old photos and cursory interviews with a handful of those who've known her, it's a boilerplate portrait that you wish rose above the level of basic hagiography. Still, there's a bit of enlightenment to be found as the movie follows the transformation of "the notorious RBG" from a feminist lawyer, arguing against gender discrimination before an all-male Supreme Court, to the liberal-leaning dissenter who now sits among them. Unfortunately, other than focusing on her relationship with her late husband, Martin, and her surprising friendship with late right-wing Justice Antonin Scalia, there's very little you haven't heard before about the unexpected pop culture icon. The fleeting insights leave you thirsting for more info about the moderate, middle-of-the-road Democrat, whether it's the 13 years she spent as an appellate judge in federal court or the period leading up to her nomination to the Supreme Court by President Bill Clinton. If there's any justice in this world, we'll get a fuller picture of Ginsburg soon. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

THE RIDER ★★★★ Two of the best films out right now are under-the-radar dramas featuring aimless young men and their connections with nature, specifically with horses in forgotten parts of America. I've previously rhapsodized about Andrew Haigh's heartbreaking Lean on Pete, but arguably even better is Chloé Zhao's experimental drama that merges fact with fiction to produce a drama of understated power. Utilizing real Sioux cowboys on locations in South Dakota's Pine Ridge Reservation—frequently during the magic hour by cinematographer Joshua James Richards—Zhao (writer/director of 2015's Songs My Brothers Taught Me) presents the semi-fictional tale of a rodeo rider named Brady Blackburn (Brady Jandreau), who has suffered a career-ending skull fracture. As we follow his recovery, we're gradually introduced to his hard-drinking, gambling-addicted dad and autistic teenage sister (played by Jandreau's real-life father and sister), his horseman buddies and finally, his best friend, Lane Scott (playing himself), a fellow casualty of the rodeo circuit who's lost the ability to walk or even speak. The patience and love that Brady shows his former mentor can't be faked. You can feel what both men have lost, having sealed their fates in 8 seconds or less. There's an old saying about dusting yourself off and climbing back onto a horse after a fall, but as some of the best films set in the Old West have demonstrated, reality can be a hell of a lot tougher to accept than the myths we grew up with. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

SUPER TROOPERS 2 ★★ Seventeen years after attempting to make a name for themselves with Super Troopers, the Broken Lizard comedy troupe still has yet to find mainstream success. So rather than even try, they play to the cheap seats with their latest, the unimaginatively titled sequel that few asked for, Super Troopers 2. Jay Chandrasekhar once again directs, working from a "loose script" by himself and fellow Broken Lizard compatriots Steve Lemme, Paul Soter, Erik Stolhanske and Kevin Heffernan, who suit up once again (in slightly larger uniforms) as Vermont state troopers Thorny, Mac, Foster, Rabbit and Farva, respectively. But even though the troopers are preaching to the choir, you can't accuse them of not knowing their audience. After all, the film was released on 4/20 and features a scene where one of the officers, in a drug-fueled hallucination, imagines that the "Highway Patrol" sign on the wall behind Capt. O'Hagan (Brian Cox, cashing a check) actually reads "Way High Patrol." (Ho-ho!) The former patrolmen have been called back into service when a land dispute at the Canadian border (in reality, Massachusetts, in and around the Quabbin Reservoir) threatens to redraw the local maps, angering the local Canuck population, who are "soorry" to hear they're about to be branded American citizens. Meanwhile, a turf battle erupts between the reactivated troopers and their Mountie counterparts (Hayes MacArthur, Tyler Labine and Will Sasso). In other words, you'll have little trouble following the plot, especially if you're high. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport and South Bay.)

TRAFFIK ★ The trailer for the latest film from writer/director Deon Taylor tells you everything you need to know about this low-rent thriller that's "based on actual events." It's a cheap piece of exploitation, and a waste of star Paula Patton's talents. So it's rather inexplicable that the Mission: Impossible–Ghost Protocol co-star is also producing this dreck, which finds Brea—the investigative journalist she plays—setting off for a romantic weekend in the country with John (Omar Epps from TV's House), her auto mechanic boyfriend. Uninvited, but showing up anyway, is a not-so-romantic biker gang of white-supremacist human traffickers. But before that comes to a head, we're treated to numerous pointless subplots, including Brea's near-firing at her newspaper, John's abortive attempts to propose to her and the surprise arrival of Darren (Laz Alonso)—the drug-addicted talent agent who loaned them the use of his company's isolated estate—and his long-suffering girlfriend. Gee, what are the chances that John once slept with Malia (Roselyn Sanchez)? But I digress. Presumably, it's the sex trafficking that makes up the "actual events" that Taylor's film is "based on," but he spends so much time ogling every inch of Patton with his camera—especially during a swimming pool sex scene—that you might want to submerge yourself in water to clean off the same type of filth that's being condemned elsewhere in the film. Ultimately, this thriller's dealing with so many mixed messages and weirdly incompatible parts that it's difficult to look away. (At Boston Common, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Truth or Dare ★ You just know that Olivia Barron (Lucy Hale of Freeform's Pretty Little Liars) is a Good Person because the college senior is going to spend her final spring break volunteering for Habitat for Humanity. Then again, her best friend and roommate, Markie Cameron (Violett Beane of CW's The Flash), did mange to coax Olivia into abandoning her altruistic plans to head to Tijuana instead. What did it take to convince her? Perhaps it's the fact that Markie's boyfriend, Lucas (Tyler Posey of MTV's Teen Wolf), is also headed down to Mexico. Director Jeff Wadlow (Kick-Ass 2) sure does take every opportunity to point out that "sweet Olivia" secretly pines for the hunk, so maybe she deserves everything that's coming to her in the latest teen-friendly horror flick from Blumhouse Productions. First and foremost, what's coming is a feature-length game of truth or dare. This cursed rendition of the DIY game is run by a demon—I think. Unfortunately, the death-dealing rules of the game are such a muddle, it's surprising that most of the characters don't die sooner as punishment for not complying with the confusing directives. It'd be great to dare the filmmakers to tell the truth: Confess that this cheaply executed movie and its Snapchat-like visual effects is a half-assed rip-off of David Robert Mitchell's 2014 horror hit, It Follows. Teenagers have short attention spans, so maybe they won't notice. But if your attention span is just fine, you'll see the truth early on: This film's real horror stems from its tedium. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

You Were Never Really Here ★★★★ It's only April, but you might not see a better film this year than Lynne Ramsay's electrifying experiment with narrative form, her fourth in nearly two decades. The 48-year-old may not be as prolific as most of her peers, but between 1999's Ratcatcher, 2002's Morvern Callar, 2011's We Need to Talk About Kevin and this latest triumph—an adaptation of Jonathan Ames' novella about an Iraq war veteran who rescues teenaged runaways and girls forced into sexual slavery—the Glasgow-born writer/director never misses. If suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder is anything like the disorienting flashes of sound and image that have been linked together with off-putting electronic music and atonal string cues courtesy of Radiohead's Jonny Greenwood, it's a nightmare best not experienced personally. But in Ramsay's hands, it's impossible to avert your eyes and ears from the horrors of her nightmare noir. Playing a role for which he was awarded Best Actor at last year's Cannes Film Festival, Joaquin Phoenix stars as Joe, a disheveled Lazarus figure whose aimless existence is given new purpose after his latest rescue effort doesn't go as planned. You may not completely piece together the conspiracy that's unfolding in between flashes of Joe's tangled memories, but ultimately, it doesn't really matter. Ramsay's command of craft, disarming flashes of humor and sense of style infuse her man-on-a-mission mashup of John Boorman's Point Blank (1967) and Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver (1976) with a poetic grace that few artists achieve. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Nathan Tavares

KEYED IN Norwegian DJ Kyrre Gørvell-Dahll, also known as Kygo, begins most of his tracks at the keyboard—but unlike many electronic music producers, it's not one plugged into a computer. The 26-year-old began his musical career with piano lessons and only became interested in EDM in 2009 after hearing remixes by Avicii. The SoundCloud sensation shirks shrieking synths in favor of a blend of instrumental and electronic beats, and his "tropical house" tracks are slower and more melodic than typical EDM thrashers, earning him international fandom and a set at the closing ceremonies of the 2016 Olympics. Released in October, his sophomore album, Kids in Love, draws inspiration from ballads like "Don't Stop Believing." Find the right key when Kygo mixes things up at TD Garden on May 12. / Imogen O'Brien

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

STOP MOTION Boston-based artist Maggie Stark explores the contrast between stillness and motion in her latest exhibition, Station Stops. The multimedia artist uses video stills and prints to freeze the commotion of the commute, juxtaposing a train station's permanenee with the perpetual motion of pedestrians. She showeases images from her daily trip on the Red Line's Mattapan Trolley as well as from a visit to Berlin's S-Bahn-Ring. In the above piece, Station Stop-Video Stills, S-Bahu Ring, Ostkreuz, 2018, the distinetion between an unmoving platform and bustling passengers exemplifies the pereeption of time, while the use of mirroring speaks to the eyclical nature of both time and trams. Hop on the nearest Red Line and zip down to Rafius Fane Gallery to eateh Station Stops through Junc 16. / Imogen O'Brien

Your immune system may be the key to beating cancer.

Immunotherapy, a new approach to cancer treatment, is bringing hope to cancer survivors everywhere. Immunotherapy works by empowering your body's own immune system to correctly identify and eradicate cancer cells. This approach has been used to effectively fight many types of cancer, with new research leading to greater hope each day. Speak with your doctor and visit standuptocancer.org/immunotherapy to learn if immunotherapy may be right for you.

The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

THERE'S A KINK FOR EVERYBODY...

They say competition breeds innovation, which explains the charm of the Charity Warriors Challenge, a two-month fundraising intensive and bootcamp for female leaders of nonprofits, organized by Power Launch.

The competition's finale was held inside the WeWork space in Central Square, where guests were given scorecards identifying the participants and participants were given a chance to lobby for guests' support, using charm, persuasion and interactive engagements. (These, unfortunately, included a strongwoman carnival-type game, featuring an unnerving bell that clanged loud enough to make one guest spill his drink.)

Seen sipping wine and eating the delicious (and surprisingly healthy) food while moving among the contestants: organizers Mary Chiochios, Saskia Epstein and Christy Cashman, retired Red Sox grand poobah Larry Lucchino and the stunning Stacey, Back Bay biker chick Christine McCormick, Newbury Street threads-peddlers Alan and Be Bilzerian, the always impeccably dressed T.K. Ankner, the always eccentrically dressed Lynne Smith, incorrigible scamp David Josef and the dazzling Danny Forrester, brunette bombshell Debbie DiMasi, blond beauty Julie Sennott, and one man who said, "I haven't been to Cambridge since we marched to Harvard Square when Nixon resigned."

When all was said and done, the original 13 contestants had raised $528,177, while the winner was Maristela Rapo, founder of Giving the Glam.

The evening's best remark: "Don't tell anyone, but I'm here mostly because I think women in armor are sexy."

VIVE LA RAINFOREST!

It takes an extraordinary woman to start with a shop on the Left Bank of Paris, selling a simple white blouse, and then grow the business into an international luxury brand. But Anne Fontaine is nothing if not extraordinary. Tall, beautiful and chic (none of which truly surprises), she's also extraordinarily resourceful and adventurous.

At the age of 17, the half-Brazilian, half-French designer spent six months living with an indigenous tribe in a remote part of Bahia, and her Anne Fontaine Foundation now works to protect the Brazilian rainforest known as the Mata Atlantica.

To that end, she hosted a breakfast at her Back Bay boutique that attracted the likes of fashion avatar Lisa Pierpont, style maven Tonya Mezrich, Gallic funboy Eric Jausseran, fashion blogger Helena Martin and others of an equally stylish ilk.

"This is a very French breakfast," observed one guest. "Champagne and macarons."

However, the funniest quip came when Fontaine explained that Gisele Bundchen had donated a dress to be auctioned off to help realize their goal of planting 100,000 trees by 2020.

"That's great," whispered one woman, "but maybe two people on the planet can wear it."

ARS LONGA, PARTY BREVIS...

Boston Design Week kicked off its festivities with AD 20/21, a gala preview to benefit the New England chapter of the American Society of Interior Designers' scholarship fund.

Held at the BCA's Cyclorama, the evening drew the likes of honoree Maurice N. Finegold, special guest Aryanour Djalali, artist, collector and curator Diane McManus Jensen and her other half, David, the personification of style Karen Rotenberg and the avuncular Michael, art photographer extraordinaire Joe Greene, shelter mag cuties Kyle Hoepner and Shannon Pastuszak, puckish PR hottie Andrew Joseph, interior design babes Eileen Patterson and Liz Georgantas, gallery owners Ian Corbin, Robert Klein, Alison Collins and Richard Boiano, statuesque art collector Ruta Laukien, the Aspen-kissed Bill Emery and one other man who, when asked why he was so tanned, said, "I went dumpster diving behind Trump Tower."

The evening's best goodbye: "If I don't see you, say hello to all those other people I never see."

AND SO SHALL YE REAP...

Funding critical medical education in East Africa is serious business, which is why the cocktail party at the Hawthorne to benefit Seed Global Health attracted a seriously A-list crowd.

On hand: the nonprofit's founder, Dr. Vanessa Kerry and her husband, Dr. Brian Nahed, her father, former Secretary of State John Kerry, the uber-glamorous Fiona and James Benenson, yummy mummy Dawn Oates, lunachick Laura Baldini, party pair Kate Lubin and Glen Sutton, Chestnut Hillions Shahrokh and Dianna Reza, Beacon Hillions Peter and Yvette Mulderry, real estate stud-muffin Michael Harper and a lot of people who hung out in the back room getting tipsy during the speaking portion of the evening.

The cocktails flowed like cocktails ought to, the sliders were superb and the evening raised $120,000 to do critical life-saving work in one of the poorest regions on the planet.

The evening's best remark, meanwhile, came from the spouse of an attendee who saw the party favors—temporary tattoos of the organization's logo—and said, "If I put these all over my face, I'd look like I had a very OCD case of chickenpox." ◆

WARM WELCOME

THIS SUMMER, THERE ARE TWO Boston arts openings that will likely dominate most of the media attention: The ICA's opening of its Watershed in Eastie this July and the reopening of the Emerson Colonial Theatre on June 27 with the world premiere of Moulin Rouge. But there are plenty of other compelling happenings across the state this season, and in this Summer Arts Preview, we look at 30 must-see events that span a bike ride away to within a boat ride's reach. The highlights range from a world premiere play starring Matthew Broderick at the Williamstown Theatre Festival to book and comedy fests on Nantucket. But there's plenty closer to home as well, with the premiere of John J. King's Martha's (b)Rainstorm at the BCA and Boston Calling taking over the Harvard Athletic Complex for its three-day fest that expands its horizons this year with new offerings from Pod Save America and Natalie Portman. Elsewhere in the magazine, Nathan Tavares chats with playwright Joshua Sobol who takes on the hot-button Middle East conflict with a new play from Israeli Stage.

But not everything in the arts is new this summer. Commonwealth Shakespeare Company will stage Richard III on the Common, continuing more than two decades of alfresco Shakespeare in Boston. The company brings back our cover star, Faran Tahir, who performed in CSC's A Midsummer Night's Dream in Copley Square in the '90s. But first, Tahir chats with Jonathan Soroff about being typecast, Pakistani food and more.

Richard III opens with a monologue from the titular star: "Now is the winter of our discontent." Sounds like—this season at least—that will be the furthest from reality.

BOW'S SHOT

A SMALL BUSINESS SANCTUARY DEBUTS IN SOMERVILLE

MARKET FRESH

Somerville's long-anticipated Bow Market opened its doors this May, bringing a treasure trove of indie-owned businesses to Union Square. After the remaining few vendors set up shop in the coming weeks and months, the 13,743-square-foot market will boast 30 purveyors including apparel artisans, confection connoisseurs and emerging artists and designers—19 of which will debut their first brick-and-mortar locations.

Housed in a 1920s-era masonry block building and designed by Boyes-Watson Architects, Bow Market's horseshoe of shops and eateries hugs a pedestrian courtyard filled with lush trees, climbing vines and a seating area crafted with granite recovered from the Longfellow Bridge. And while the space's decor has local ties, the layout of the market is internationally inspired. "Each of us partners was inspired by spaces we've been to abroad," says partner Zachary Baum. "The piazzas in Italy, the souks in Marrakesh, markets in Greece—they all provide affordable ways for small-scale businesses to sell their goods and beautiful spaces for the public to enjoy."

Bow Market's first level houses several food vendors and is anchored by Remnant Brewing's taproom and expansive outdoor patio. Keeping with the industrial-chic aesthetic of the market, a galvanized steel walkway leads to the second level, which mostly consists of storefronts for artists and retailers as well as the Comedy Studio, a community-oriented club that will book up-and-coming and nationally renowned talent.

In accordance with Bow Market's mission to provide opportunities for all artists, MassDevelopment will supply an arts agenda—including the creation of five murals and a rotating residency program, which will allow locals to lead workshops, arrange gallery exhibitions and create installations.

That possibility extends across all aspects of Bow Market. Baum says: "Our business owners represent groups of people that don't often get the opportunity to start their own businesses." / Cathryn Haight

DOUBLE THREAT

It's easy to get overwhelmed with so many vendors at Bow Market—be sure to check out these standout spots.

SNACK

> Maca founder Tamy Chung grew up making all sorts of cookies before stumbling on the très chic French macaron. Her small-batch macaronerie offers classic and limited-edition flavors, such as Fruity Pebbles and blueberry-basil cheesecake, as well as custom hand-piped varietals of the almond-based confections featuring designs ranging from unicorns to Pokémon.

> Sisters Casey and Vanessa White delve into their grandfather's recipe box at their pierogi shop Jaju. The siblings serve traditional and fusion versions of the Polish dumplings—ranging from jalapeño-cheddar to butternut squash, apple and sage—available fresh to immediately munch or frozen for later use.

> What began as a program by the Somerville Arts Council to give visibility to immigrant food entrepreneurs is now Nibble Kitchen, a collective of international cooks from local immigrant communities bringing their expertise to a rotating restaurant. NOW ORÁ NEVER

AN ITALIAN EATERY COMES TO BACK BAY

Orá Trattorizza
655 Boylston St., Boston
orotrottorizzo.com

Restaurateur Josephine Megwa—owner of Piattini Wine Cafe on Newbury Street—is bringing another taste of Italy to the Back Bay with her latest venture, Orá Trattorizza. Partnering with Mark Hagopian, owner of the neighboring Charlesmark Hotel, Megwa hopes Bostonians can slow down at the two-floor concept, slated to open on Boylston Street in June.

"Orá means 'now' and it comes from the feeling that life is racing by," Megwa explains. "I see people on their cellphones while they're having dinner, and they're missing that eye contact and that conversation, which is why people go out. So I say, 'Orá.' Live now, eat now, be present now."

Megwa tapped design duo Amy Margolis and Ryan Spaulding to create the rustic vibe of the restaurant that features seating for 78 in the main dining area, with an additional 60 on the patio and a 30-seat lounge for private events. With glowing, orb-like lanterns, white walls and a custom oven imported from Italy, Megwa hopes guests feel transported.

"We wanted to evoke warmth," Megwa says. "We want you to feel like you're not on Boylston Street, but like maybe you're in Italy or Europe instead."

Orá will open seven days a week for lunch and dinner, with plans for Sunday brunch as well. The seasonal menu will include salads, such as the kale bowl made with organic greens, corn, roasted barley, grilled fennel, golden raisins and a lemon-cilantro vinaigrette, and brick-oven pizzas that can be made gluten-free, like the melanzane pie topped with fried eggplant, roasted heirloom tomatoes, smoked mozzarella and pesto. Pasta dishes will include options like shrimp al limone with seared prawns, lemon and basil fettuccine, roasted cherry tomatoes and garlic white wine.

For its beverage program, Orá will utilize the Charlesmark Bar helmed by manager Jefferson Ryder, along with offering wines created for the restaurant by a friend of Megwa's that use the fruits of his Italian family estate in Montespertoli, Tuscany. The house white is a blend of trebbiano, chardonnay and malvasia grapes, while the red combines sangiovese and merlot.

"My whole hope with this restaurant is for people to live in the moment," Megwa says. "I want people to learn how to slow down a little bit and enjoy the moment and enjoy the food."

STICK TO IT: Jamaica Plain's Wild Pops serves small-batch icy treats

Good Eats: Pop Star

With the early May opening of Wild Pops in Jamaica Plain, there's at least one reason to relish the sweltering heat. Shira Gold churns out small-batch gourmet ice-pops—including a mango coconut sticky rice flavor—which are a delicious air-conditioned blast to the taste buds. This play on the classic Thai dessert is made with mango and coconut milk plus an unexpected surprise: rice. "There's a sweet and salty coconut sauce that we soak the rice in, and we also mix that with the fresh mango," Gold says. The rice is cooked, steeped in the tropical mixture and then immediately frozen, adding a gummy textural bounce to a sweet concert of flavors. / Nathan Tavares

RED ALERT

There's a gap between the impressive quality of many Israeli wines and the country's absence on restaurant lists or in fine wine stores. Supply is not large; Israel's total grapevine acreage is half of Napa Valley's. But something has been happening under the radar, particularly with distinctive full-throttle red wines, that deserves wider recognition. In a region where water is scarce, Israel's pioneering innovations in desalination and irrigation have enabled its tiny fine-wine industry to emerge and flourish. These three top-of-the-line bottles prove that there is a new and exciting flavor on the world wine scene. / Sandy Block

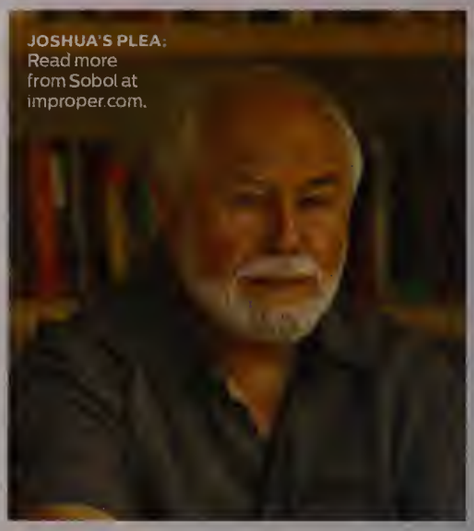
TEPERBERG LEGACY PETITE SIRAH, SAMSON, 2014

There's nothing petite about this stunner from one of Israel's storied family wineries, a fifth-generation producer dating to 1830. Bold and smoky, it has a black fruit aroma, with undertones of wild game and clove. Though highly concentrated in flavor, it s silky and juicy at the same time, with a lingering finish that would pair well with braised beef.

$65, Wine Gallery, Brookline

BLACK TULIP, GALILEE, 2014

Located on a mountainside at Kfar Tikvah ("village of hope"), where all the residents are special-needs adults who staff the winery, Tulip makes this beautifully crafted Bordeaux blend, which is cabernet sauvignon dominant. Winemaker David Bar-Ilan ages it for two years in prime French oak barrels, resulting in a juicy and ripe bottle with grace notes of tobacco, cedar and vanilla. This is a cellar candidate, or decant it now an hour ahead of time and enjoy with a rack of lamb.



$79, Gordon's, Wolthom

PSÂGOT EDOM M SERIES, JERUSALEM, 2016

This is a supple, highly concentrated merlot-dominant Bordeaux blend produced on rocky limestone terraces at a nosebleed height of 3,000 feet. Plummy and scented with dried herbs, it has a firm mineral and acid structure with moderate tannin, plus a hint of dark chocolate in the finish—a nice complement to roasted chicken.

$40, The Butcherie, Brookline

Q&A
WORDS AND WALLS

Israeli playwright Joshua Sobol spoke with us just before the world premiere of his play The Last Act, presented by Israeli Stage and directed by Guy Ben-Aharon through June 1 at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion. Set in Israel, his sensual portrait of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is depicted against the backdrop of actors improvising an adaptation of the 1889 drama Miss Julie. / Nathan Tavares

WHAT WAS YOUR INSPIRATION FOR THE PLAY? The events that took place in Israel some three years ago. It began with kind of an intifada or uprising in the territories. Many of the attacks took place in Jerusalem, and it was basically individuals who decided to get a hold of a knife or something, and to go stab someone. And the reaction of Israel was to encourage people who had weapons in their possession to take their own guns and shoot everyone who was trying to stab them. ... People's nerves overrode them and they were very prone to get a hold of weapons and react violently.

WHY DID YOU DECIDE TO INCORPORATE MISS JULIE INTO THE WORK? Somehow it occurred to me that there was something in August Strindberg's play that could serve as a very sound basis for such an event because there is a kind of love story—it's not exactly a love story—but a very strong sexual attraction between a woman who comes from the upper class and a servant who comes from the lower class. And this relationship that begins at a mid-summer night celebration leads at the end to a very tragic moment. ... I felt this kind of structure of a man who comes from a different background—in our case it doesn't happen on the level of class difference but he being a Palestinian and she being an Israeli—could take the same kind of development as in Strindberg's play. So my idea was to create the situation where a Palestinian actor and an Israeli actress rehearse Strindberg's play but try to improvise it and bring it closer to the Israeli-Palestinian situation.

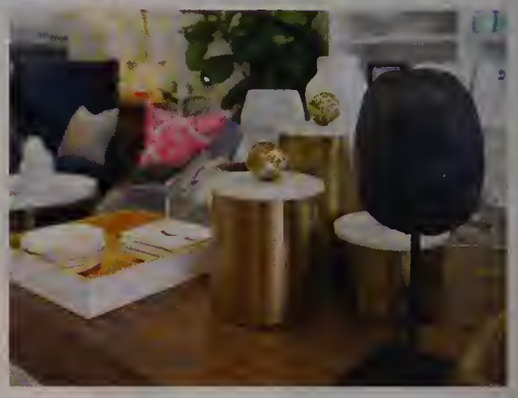
PURVEYORS
HOME FRONT

Perhaps the frenzy attached to local restaurant openings has spread to local retail shops: One week after debuting Deirfiúr Home in early May, co-owner Justene Spitz had to scramble to restock her inventory.

"We got slammed during the Southie Spring Stroll," Spitz says. "It completely wiped us out of wall art."

It was a welcome predicament for Spitz, an interior designer who also runs JS Interiors, and her business partner Karen Argus. The pair spent years working on plans for a store before finally inking a lease in December on East Broadway to take over what were originally two storefronts. Rolf glassware, Greenmarket candles and Mariposa tabletop accessories fill the store along with plenty of throw blankets and pillows—and, of course, in-demand wall art from local artist Tommy Cherry, who is a firefighter by day. But there are also larger pieces such as sofas, love seats and rugs.

"There isn't a general home furnishings or accessories store in the neighborhood," says Spitz, who was born and raised in Southie. "We've got a subtle coastal beach vibe in the store because we have some great beaches in this neighborhood."



Spitz, who's offering a trade discount, pegs her price point at higher than a big-box store but lower than the Boston Design Center. There's a nearby storage container full of inventory that will help Spitz and Argus keep the 1,800-square-foot space well-stocked in case there's another run on items.

"It's cash and carry. We're stocking a ton, so if you buy a swivel chair, you can take it right out of the store that day," Spitz says. "There's a ton of foot traffic here, and we'd love to become a destination—especially for designers." / Matt Martinelli

Guests can peer beyond the living room's crystal chandelier for a look inside the iconic landmark's architectural design or head to the 1,000-square-foot terrace for water views.

> Kimpton Nine Zero just finished a total renovation of its downtown digs, including all 190 guest rooms and suites—most of which now sport an Eames lounge chair. Penthouse frequenters have access to a billiards table and telescope, while all guests can peruse 1630 Boston's wares or chat with the newly added in-house historian during Wine Hours.

> The former Days Hotel on Soldiers Field Road will transform into soon-to-open Studio Allston thanks to Robin Brown, who oversaw the Four Seasons for more than a dozen years before developing the Mandarin Oriental. Custom art will deck out the front entrance, 117 rooms and even key cards, and guests can dine at a restaurant with an outdoor courtyard.

NAILED IT

A NEW RASH OF KILLINGS REUNITES A VICTIM AND HER SAVIOR

The Vanishing Season* by Joanna Schaffhausen
Published by Minotaur Books, 274 pages, $25

Abby Hathaway is the only one of serial killer Francis Coben's 17 victims who lived, but her true identity didn't survive the harrowing experience. After escaping, Abby changes her name to Ellery, becomes a police officer and tries to keep her sorrowful history a secret in local author Joanna Schaffhausen's debut novel, The Vanishing Season.

The man who saves her, FBI agent Reed Markham, is now embroiled in a career kerfuffle. He reunites with Ellery after a possible copycat has killed three people, his signature cutting off the victims' hands and displaying them like morbid hitchhikers minus their bodies. Ellery's more interested in solving this tragedy than her fellow cops; even her married co-worker, Sam, with whom she's having a casual affair takes an irritated attitude toward her mission and concern.

Schaffhausen's stance toward her characters carries a sophisticated air and, despite all the suspense and bloody terrors she describes, she adds subtlety and complexity to the plot. There's also a nice mix of psychological ingredients: Ellery, given her past, has nailed her own closets shut, and when those closets are discovered, suspicion hovers around her. But the investigation continues as Reed and Ellery, with their unusual common bond, work together to solve the new murders. The hair-raising story flows along, examining a number of relationships and angles before arriving at a surprising truth.

From page 229: "Reed looked at her profile and swallowed back a surge of emotion, of tenderness and pride and a flicker of something baser, a sudden heat at his center that tinged his thoughts with shame. He'd rescued her as a girl when he'd known nothing more about her than the statistics listed on the missing persons poster. Now she was a grown woman, insightful and infuriating, with just a bunch of nails keeping the worst of her past at bay, and suddenly he was fiercely grateful for her. He wished she could see how remarkable she really was." ◆

HIPSTER HAVEN

THE HOME OF YALE IS UPPING ITS GAME WITH ARTS, MUSIC AND FOOD

When it comes to Massachusetts' interstate rivalries, "Harvard versus Yale" is to Ivy Leaguers what "Red Sox versus Yankees" is to sports fans. In both cases, of course, we root-root-root for the home team.

That said, props when due: Yale's city of New Haven, where you'll still find some urban grit in the seams of those tweed jackets, is increasingly competitive with upmarket Cambridge in terms of preserving hipster-skewing college-town charm. Make no mistake; we're still loyal to the People's Republic. But it's worth taking a crash course on visiting Connecticut's second-largest city.

Start at the Study at Yale, part of Study Hotels, a brand siting smart, sophisticated properties at East Coast campuses. The 124-room hotel has sumptuous leather seats with academia-inspired accents, like signature seersucker robes, and elegant farm-to-table restaurant Heirloom.

Wake up with java from Koffee?, a curious little gourmet coffee house that'll kick off your morning with a Nutella latte or, after 5 pm, pour hot and cold coffee- and tea-based cocktails.

Bar-wise, you'll also want to blow by Three Sheets, a "friendly neighborhood gastrodive" popular with indie-punk crowds. Gobble neat eats like octopus banh mi at patio picnic tables and sip craft beers like Hull's Export Lager, a beloved local brew that was revived in limited quantities this year after a four-decade hiatus. If you're not game for its pool table backroom—which also hosts monthly second-Saturday art shows—hit up boisterous Barcade to down brews and drop coins in dozens of blinking nostalgia-invoking machines like four-player Pac-Man. But save some quarters for the fun, cheap scene at 168 York Street Cafe, a gay bar tucked in the lower level of an unassuming historic brownstone. It's home to boozy brunches on a cloistered rear patio and drag shows with some of New England's quirkiest queens.

There's actually an alternative edge to much of the arts and culture scene in New Haven. Take basement-level venue Yale Cabaret, currently celebrating 50 years of boundary-pushing works like For Your Eyes Only, a recent show exploring the webcam sex industry and fetish culture. Artspace, a Civil War-era furniture factory-turned-nonprofit gallery complex, exhibits experimental work and is a key player in cultural events like the City-Wide Open Studios series. And Lyric Hall, a recently restored former opera and vaudeville theater, is stuffed with antique objets d'art and a lineup of everything from burlesque shows to adult puppetry.

Before curtain call, stop into Strange Ways across the street, the New Haven storefront of a popular online shop specializing in unique gifts—particularly pins, patches and other funky flair (including exclusive collections launched with cult movie stars) that'll dress up your denim jacket. For more geek-chic glam, visit Fashionista Vintage & Variety to raid a righteously retro, gently used wardrobe.

Rock your new threads at one of the city's live music halls like Toad's Place, a legendary Yale-side spot with a storied history—Bob Dylan once played a career-long, nearly five-hour concert here—that earned it a spot on Rolling Stone's list of America's best big-room venues. Cocktail bar Firehouse 12, located inside a renovated firehouse, has an on-site recording studio that performs double-duty as a 75-seat auditorium for jazz concerts and more. And Cafe Nine—dubbed "the musician's living room" for its intimate, lo-fi style—is where to catch buzz-building bands on their way to breakout status.

As dining headliners go, you could stick to historic favorites like Louis' Lunch, which the Library of Congress recognizes as the 1895 birthplace of the hamburger sandwich served on white toast, or the first location of Frank Pepe pizzeria, originator of coal-fired New Haven-style pies. But the city is also earning a reputation for one of New England's best contemporary dining scenes thanks to options like Zinc, a stylish, on-trend eatery with electic global cuisine and an outstanding wine list, and Barracuda Bistro & Bar, a Latin-American affair for seafood paella, Peruvian chicken and refreshing rum cocktails.

On your way out of town, stop into the Pez Visitor Center, a 4,000-square-foot manufacturing facility and museum dedicated to the candy and its famous collectible dispensers. It's a fun final stop—because really, every hipster-friendly road trip requires an ironic ending. ◆

GAGA BODEGA

A BELOVED RESTAURANT TEAM STARTS FRESH WITH A WATERTOWN TAPAS SPOT

The old Salts restaurant in Cambridge had a storied 10-year run as a much-loved romantic spot that featured elegant, French-inspired food from chef Gabriel Bremer, and memorably warm hospitality from his wife and co-owner Analia Verolo. Then in 2014, misfortune struck in the form of a burst pipe and a shifty landlord, and suddenly Salts was no more. It took four years and a Kickstarter campaign for the couple to open La Bodega, their new home in a charmingly quirky East Watertown building. In place of Salts' pricey roast duck carved tableside, they now serve elemental tapas, mostly Spanish and French-Basque style, punched up with accents from Verolo's native Uruguay.

The striking space consists of two long, narrow rooms: one a glass-roofed, seemingly endless bar of 25 seats with another 24 at tables and the other a 35-seat dining room remodeled from a midcentury railway dining car. Dark natural and painted wood surfaces evoke the feel of a rustic wine cellar. It's an inviting, intimate setting for grazing, maybe starting with marinated olives ($4) scented with fennel and chili. Deviled farm eggs ($5) boast garnishes of paprika, pipparas and high-pedigree Mangalitsa ham. Another fancy porker, the acorn-fed ibérico de bellota, is the basis of a generous plate of salami-like salchichón ($12). Pan con tomate ($6) is one of those crazy-simple, crazy-good Spanish dishes featuring toasted bread topped with fresh tomato puree, a hint of raw garlic and salt. If you don't recognize "grilled" provolone ($8), that's because it's Uruguayan: darkly skillet-crusted, chewy within, generously dusted with oregano and served in a cunning GraniteWare miniature paella pan.

A roasted beet salad ($9) dotted with fried almonds, sheep cheese, orange segments and mint is prettier than the plainish kale salad ($8) with cheese, hazelnuts and an eggy vinaigrette, but both are delectable. The superb white gazpacho ($8) makes a dreamy puree of almonds, breadcrumbs and olive oil, gently sweetened by grapes and prettily draped with radish slices and spring garlic tendrils. A white-on-white salad of hearts of palm and French white asparagus ($14) dressed with salsa golf (Argentinian for "mayo and ketchup") seems wan and dull by comparison.

Uruguayan flavors get a better showcase in empanadas ($10) that are oily, crisp-edged, baked savory turnovers filled with chopped beef or duck. Heirloom baby carrots ($10) cooked a la plancha are fashionably multi-hued and underscored by a terrific, vivid romesco. The charcoal grill adds subtle smoke to dishes like grilled Maine oysters ($14), four big 'uns delicately accented with seaweed butter and ramp mignonette. Wild mushroom escabeche ($15) is another dish that wows with clever embellishments, including a few nuggets of baby artichoke and especially a tenderly poached farm egg in the middle to swirl about as a sauce. The richness of wood-grilled sweetbreads ($14) gains necessary contrast from a squeeze of roasted lemon and bright brininess from a smashing salsa verde of parsley, shallots and capers.

Albondigas de cordero ($14), lamb meatballs layered between beds of verdant English peas and garlic greens, reads generous but a trifle underseasoned. Solo diners might make a meal of chivito al pan ($17), a gorgeous, messy pile-up of a sandwich with sliced beef tenderloin, country ham, pancetta and a dripping, sunny fried egg on a great, chewy roll. It's staggering and fantastic.

The winsome desserts include Martin Fierro ($10), a cleverly presented variant of manchego y membrillo, here striping quince paste with local cow cheese dusted with crushed almonds. A salt-flecked, tender-crusted dark chocolate tart ($12) gets sweet accompaniment from candied pignoli and bright-and-tangy uplift from fresh orange segments. Budin de pan ($12), a light-bodied bread pudding with caramelized bananas, boasts a fascinating side of mace ice cream.

The space and the food beg for accompanying drinks, which La Bodega obliges with a short list of specialty cocktails ($10-$14) that include Uruguayan fillips like honey grappa and yerba mate tea, though the bartenders throw classics like a Negroni with a giant ice cube ($13) perfectly well. Six vermouths by the glass ($9-$10) offer a lighter (and very traditionally Spanish) aperitivo option; we really liked sweet vermouths from Rosso Contrato ($10) and Lustau ($9), served in beautiful antique stemware. From a short list of beers and ciders ($5-$18; large-format, $25), a couple of Spaniards also stood out like the draft cider Riestra ($9), with its funky tartness and faint carbonation, and the sweeter, bubblier bottled Asturian pear cider Viuda de Angelón ($9).

Weeknight wine joy is found in eight by-the-glass options ($9-$16), notably by Uruguayan winemaker Bodegas Carrau, whose 2015 sauvignon blanc ($10) and 2014 tannat reserva ($12) are value-priced winners. The 150-strong bottle list, drawing mainly from France, Spain and Uruguay, is predominantly scaled to the menu's modest prices (most whites under $60, most reds under $90), but the deep-pocketed can spend $150-$450 on 30 or so trophy bottles that must have survived the Salts deluge. Despite that echo of a much fancier restaurant at the end of a hard road, Bremer and Verolo have settled comfortably into their new, more affordable, less occasion-oriented format, one that ably suits its idiosyncratic neighborhood setting. One may not envy what it took to get there, but in 2018, La Bodega feels like a very sweet place for them—and for us—to be. ◆

HAVING A BALL

➜ On April 9, the Museum of Fine Arts hosted A Taste of Ginger, an annual gala to support the Asian American Diabetes Initiative at Joslin Diabetes Center. Partygoers enjoyed tasty samplings prepared by 33 restaurants from across the city, along with a silent auction and taekwondo demonstration. The 300 guests helped raise about $215,000.

➜ Make-A-Wish Massachusetts and Rhode Island held its Where Wishes Take Center Court benefit on April 7 at the InterContinental Boston, where the annual gala paid tribute to the Boston Celtics, a longtime wish granting partner. Partygoers enjoyed cocktails, followed by a dinner program, a live auction and a dance party. The 500 guests raised nearly $1 million to grant life-changing wishes for children between the ages of 2 and 18 with critical illnesses in Massachusetts.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE SOME BROKEN BLOOD VESSELS ON MY NOSE AND CHEEKS THAT LOOK LIKE LITTLE RED SPIDERS. HOW DO I GET RID OF THEM?

A: Many of us get broken blood capillaries and it can make our skin look red or flushed. Rosacea can also create ruddy, red skin. The good news is that your redness and broken capillaries can be cleared up quickly with an IPL treatment.

IPL, or Intense Pulsed Light, uses light energy to zap, and essentially cauterize, the broken blood vessels and capillaries, cutting off the leaking of blood causing the redness. It is effective for tiny vessels that look like little streams, as well as diffuse redness, or ruddiness, as is found with rosacea. By removing the redness, you will look healthier and younger due to a clear complexion.

LUCASFILM / WALT DISNEY PICTURES

SOLO: A STAR WARS STORY ★½
Starring Alden Ehrenreich, Joonas Suotamo, Woody Harrelson, Emilia Clarke, Thandie Newton, Phoebe Waller-Bridge, Paul Bettany, Jon Favreau, Linda Hunt and Donald Glover. Written by Jonathan and Lawrence Kasdan, based on characters created by George Lucas. Directed by Ron Howard. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

HAN'S OFF

THE ORIGIN STORY OF STAR WARS' CHARMING SCOUNDREL LACKS CHARACTER

FROM THE MOMENT THE TRADITIONAL text that fills in the backstory of this latest Star Wars film appears onscreen, it's apparent that something's a bit off.

Unlike Gareth Edwards' surprisingly enjoyable war movie/heist picture, Rogue One—the first standalone film to deviate from the episodes focusing on the Skywalker clan—Ron Howard's Solo: A Star Wars Story suffers greatly from what was probably always going to be an identity crisis.

Howard replaced Solo's original directors, Phil Lord and Christopher Miller, after they'd already shot three-quarters of the script penned by fan favorite Lawrence Kasdan and his son Jonathan. Although both pictures were notoriously troubled productions requiring extensive and expensive reshoots to correct course—an uncredited Tony Gilroy (writer/director of Michael Clayton) supplied a new third act and more for Rogue One without Edwards' involvement—the finished version of Rogue One differentiated itself immediately by dispensing altogether with Star Wars' opening title crawl.

Solo, meanwhile, begins with a half-measure. Instead of eschewing the opening text, Howard simply presents it in a different manner. Rather than scrolling up toward infinity, the words that he uses to set up the adventure-filled origin story of intergalactic smuggler and scoundrel Han Solo are blandly displayed without any screen movement at all. But then, what better way to begin a movie that notably lacks forward momentum?

To be honest, it'd be shocking if anyone could pull off a film about a proto-Solo. It'd be interesting to see what kind of gonzo comic tone that Lord and Miller—best known as the creative forces behind The Lego Movie, along with 21 Jump Street and its sequel—were conjuring for their visit to a galaxy far, far away. Alas, the elder Kasdan—writer of The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi—was reportedly not too thrilled with any liberties the improv-friendly duo were taking with his latest script, so he prompted Lucasfilm president Kathleen Kennedy to take the unprecedented step of replacing them late in filming with team player Howard, whose own creative force aligned far more easily with Disney's business-minded vision of the Force.

The last thing you want to do is play it safe. And yet, that's exactly what's been done.

If you're going to take the ill-advised step of dramatizing the early years of Star Wars' most enigmatic bad boy, the last thing you want to do is play it safe. And yet, that's exactly what's been done, both from a story and character standpoint. Perhaps nobody could have filled the boots of 75-year-old Harrison Ford, who first shot this role in 1977. Although 28-year-old Alden Ehrenreich (Hail, Caesar!) brings a certain amount of swagger to his portrayal, he lacks the hot-headed temperament best embodied by the combination of Ford's icy stare and his Finger Point of Doom. Amazingly, this signature gesture isn't deployed even once in this Western-influenced noir that doubles as yet another heist-driven Star Wars movie.

There is, of course, still fan service to be found. But there's a remarkable amount of subtlety and restraint shown when the film does nod to certain iconic lines of dialogue or Han's propensity to ditch cargo at the first sign of trouble—always a no-no for successful smugglers. Despite this, it doesn't seem like Ehrenreich and Ford are playing the same Solo, which robs some sequences of their intended power such as in the first meeting between Han and his longtime friend and co-pilot, Chewbacca. The Wookiee, however, still comes off as his same old self (190 years old!) even though the role made famous by 73-year-old Peter Mayhew has been successfully taken over by 31-year-old Joonas Suotamo, a former Finnish basketball player.

Even better is Donald Glover (the talented actor, producer, writer, director, comedian and Grammy-winning performer behind musical alter-ego Childish Gambino), who effortlessly slips into Billy Dee Williams' super-fly capes as a spectacularly believable Lando Calrissian, the gambler who's destined to lose the Millennium Falcon, his prized space cruiser, in a card game to Solo. If only there were a film called Lando.

Instead, Solo is a rather soulless cover version of a character that isn't even enlivened by the wall-to-wall music that backs his every move. And although legendary Star Wars composer John Williams is credited with finally supplying Han with his own musical theme, it's mixed too sparsely among the bombastic white noise of a disappointing score from the usually reliable John Powell, who's previously helped films like How to Train Your Dragon take flight.

But rather than soar, Solo and the Falcon barely get off the ground, never mind into orbit. ◆ plays Boston Calling on May 27 and the Sinclair on May 29.

Music / Paul Robicheau

INSIDE OUT

INDIE-FOLK RUMINATOR TURNS INTIMATE STRUGGLES INTO CATHARSIS AND COMMUNITY

Julien Baker carries clues to her admiration for Woody Guthrie. One's a tattoo of a resolution, "Wake up and fight," from the folk icon's diary. And in a nod to Guthrie's guitar sticker that read "This machine kills fascists," Baker topped her heavily adorned acoustic with another bumper statement: "This machine kills sadness."

Her guitars, piano and voice indeed give Baker weapons to tackle love, loneliness and mental illness in melancholy, unflinching songs of pain and perseverance. "The music that I create is somber in its sonic quality and also deals with pretty heavy topics lyrically," the 22-year-old Tennessee native says before countering, "We only gain power over the most difficult parts of our lives when we are willing to confront them honestly and directly."

After facing personal issues from faith to substance abuse on 2015's stunning Sprained Ankle, Baker turned her self-expression into universal truths on last year's widely lauded gem Turn Out the Lights, bringing her innermost thoughts to a larger audience. One downside to her expanded lifestyle: To play Boston Calling on May 27, she's flying cross-country after appearing at a music festival in Washington on May 25 and won't risk bringing that now-personalized guitar that her father passed along.

On the other hand, despite the intimate nature of her songs and past struggles with stage fright, Baker says she's not concerned about playing to a huge crowd that may be preoccupied with talking, partying or waiting for another band. "I don't necessarily feel like I need to demand total attention," she says. "It also takes the pressure off me in a sense and allows me to be a little more lively."

Levity isn't Baker's best-known quality, though she's as amiable and upbeat in conversation as she can be onstage. After Boston Calling, she'll play a May 29 "Beyond the Band" show at the Sinclair that includes a discussion with her manager, booker and publicist (the behind-the-scenes people who, Baker says, "make my creative life possible"), as well as an audience Q&A and a short performance.

"As a musician, I'm just making art about my life and sharing it. It is very cathartic but it's OK to imbue that with some humor and joy."

"I don't want to give off an attitude as if I'm a brooding musician that's totally self-absorbed within the supposed gravity of all of my poetry," Baker says. "As a musician, I'm just making art about my life and sharing it. It is very cathartic but it's OK to imbue that with some humor and joy."

Even as Baker mulls inadequacy and depression over the celestial chime of her looped electric guitar in Turn Out the Lights' hymn-like "Appointments," a glimmer of hope transforms into a mantra. "Maybe it's all going to turn out all right," Baker sings. "And I know that it's not, but I have to believe that it is."

"You are presented with an ultimatum to concede to despair and say, 'This is the way I will always feel,' " Baker says, "or to believe against your better reason that there is still a chance for things to turn around." One key, she says, is to embrace small victories: "There's no completely happy ending, no real perfect world devoid of hurt or pain or loss. We can't believe that, just like there's no perfect relationship. But the promise, the unattainable desire for us to say, 'Let's give it one more shot because I still want this thing so badly,' this thing being happiness or this glimpse of joy, that's the engine of human motivation that keeps us waking up in the morning. If we believed that it was unattainable, we wouldn't try."

Growing up, Baker found an overlapping sense of connection in church and the hardcore punk circuit—and played guitar in both. "It was so intense for me as a child to need something, some community to latch onto," she says, noting that hardcore scene "became just as much of a faith community as the church."

Baker now finds community on tour, interacting with fans and kindred artists (including book swaps with singer/songwriter Lucy Dacus). Although she performs solo, Baker enlists violinist Camille Faulkner for some songs and says she wants to collaborate more. And she's taken up running. "I'm in a lot better shape, and I think it impacts your mental health and gives you a chance to relax and have some clarity." ◆

SINKING SENSATION

DRIPPING WITH EXHAUSTION FROM A DIY KITCHEN PROJECT

I DISLIKE DOUBLE-BOWL KITCHEN SINKS. They might serve a purpose, if your domestic habits require the ability to soak a stack of tiny plates while simultaneously rinsing some other diminutive item, like a single grape. You take your one useful sink and divvy it into two pointless sinks, neither of which is big enough to fit a saucepan and one of which doesn't have a garbage disposal. So when guests come over and inevitably clean a plate into the non-disposal side, you have to feign nonchalance and say, "Oh, haha, disposal's on the other side! Let me just scoop out your half-chewed beef gristle with my bare hands!" while you grind your teeth to nubs and blood vessels explode in your eyeballs. OK, I hate double-bowl sinks.

So my wife, Heather, and I were almost happy when our garbage disposal started leaking. While we were replacing it, we could also rid ourselves of the dumb sink and with it our braided stainless faucet, which at one point was supposed to look cool and industrial but now evoked the chic ambiance of a bankrupt dog-washing facility.

I measured the sink and went to a plumbing place, where I ordered a single-bowl undermount replacement, along with a new faucet and disposal. The guy there told me they don't install sinks but gave me cards for a few plumbers, so I called them. The plumbers in turn told me they didn't want anything to do with sink installation and gave me numbers for countertop guys. Finally, the countertop guys said they could do it. But only if I signed paperwork saying that it was OK for them to break the counters, which they almost certainly would. And also the job would cost roughly the same as a trip to Tahiti. But other than that, they'd be happy to come over to break my counters and probably not install a sink.

Faced with this impasse, I did the logical thing and put a bucket under the leaky disposal while boxes of new equipment sat in the garage. In the meantime, I poked a knife through some of the adhesive between the sink and the counter and watched gravity slowly peel the sink down. I'd assumed there were bolts or something under there, but no: All this time, the sink was just glued in. To arrest its descent, I put two bottle jacks underneath it. This was the kitchen situation for about a month: a leaky sink propped up with car jacks. I think I could probably host an HGTV show called Good Enough for Now or maybe You Have Any Better Ideas?

Eventually, I confronted the reality that sometimes if you want a job done right—or at all—you have to do it yourself. So I bought supplies, disconnected the plumbing and wrestled the old sink out of the sinkhole. Now I was committed.

I figured I needed the strongest adhesive I could find, so I went to Lowe's and chose the one with the scariest disclaimers. The glue was called something like Death Grip and carried warnings to the effect of: "If you get this on your skin, congratulations: You're now permanently waterproof. But also flammable. Inhaling this product will cause you to become the Three-Eyed Raven. If any product is left over, ship the tube to Yucca Mountain in an armed convoy and pray that this wretched devil snot may never glue the sun to the horizon, plunging the earth into eternal dusk. Good luck with your project!"

This was the kitchen situation for about a month: a leaky sink propped up with car jacks.

With the new sink roughly in place, I carefully applied the adhesive and raised the jacks to clamp it against the counter. Staring down at that new pristine basin, uninterrupted by a divide, my heart swelled with triumph. A day later, I tentatively removed the jacks and...the new sink stayed where it was. Plumbers arrived and hooked everything up. The install was done, and I did it—mostly. When friends came over, I bragged about my DIY aptitude and how I'd tackled a job none of the so-called pros wanted to do. "That adhesive holds 285 pounds per square inch," I'd say. "I could stand in this sink."

You probably see where this is going. One night, I soaked a heavy iron saucepan in the sink, and for a moment I thought, "This pan, filled with water, is quite a heavy item to leave in a sink that is, after all, only glued in." An hour later, we were sitting on the couch watching TV when a low groan issued from the kitchen. "What was that?" Heather asked, just before her question was answered by the singular sound of a sink crashing down into the lower cabinet.

Now, if I could do it all over again—well, actually, I am doing it all over again, because my sink fell out. But to salvage some karmic upside from this debacle, I decided to bring my perfectly good double-bowl stainless sink—the one I never should have removed—to Habitat for Humanity. It made me feel righteous, and justified in my tribulations, when the guy at the loading dock took a look, frowned, and told me they didn't want it. ◆

CROWNING GLORY

THE VETERAN ACTOR SOUNDS OFF ON SHAKESPEARE, HEAVY MAKEUP AND PAKISTANI FOOD

ACTOR FARAN TAHIR, 55, WAS BORN IN LOS ANGELES into a distinguished artistic family and raised in Pakistan before returning to the U.S. in 1980 to study at Cal-Berkeley, and then at Harvard with the American Repertory Theater. Best known as Raza in Iron Man and Capt. Robau in Star Trek, he made his film premiere in the 1994 live-action version of The Jungle Book. His numerous television credits include The Practice, NYPD Blue, Lost, The West Wing, Monk and Scandal, while his extensive theater credits include a critically lauded Othello with the Shakespeare Theatre Company. More than two decades after starring in Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's first alfresco production, the San Diego resident returns to Boston this summer to play the titular role in CSC's Richard III on Boston Common.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Line from Shakespeare that best sums up your life?
FARAN TAHIR: Let's see. There's a line in Othello that I love: "Perdition catch my soul, but I do love thee! And when I love thee not, chaos is come again." I think that's just such a beautiful line about loving someone. I aspire to that.

Favorite Shakespeare play? There are three: Othello, Richard III and Macbeth. For very different reasons. Othello, I think it's intriguing this idea that every culture in every time period has always had this concept of "the other" in society. Here's a man who, it's fine for him to go fight their wars, but god forbid he fall in love with one of their women. That's intriguing, how we reduce people to just being functions and utilities. With Richard III, his hatred for himself and others is very intriguing to me. And with Macbeth, the thing that really draws me in is: Here is a man driven to do drastic things with such tremendous inner conflict. He's constantly haunted by it, which to me is exciting.

Your father is also an actor. How did he respond when you told him your career plans? [Laughs.] He said, "Do anything else but this." Literally.

Greatest length you ever went to for a role? There was a movie, when I first got out of the A.R.T. program, which I was very interested in, but I had a 6-week-old daughter. The only way I could meet with the director was to drive to Toronto. To put a 6-week-old baby in your car and drive all the way from Boston to Toronto was a long way to go. [Laughs.]

Thing you miss most about Pakistan? The food. Lahore is the food capitol and it's just so good. I also miss the sort of laid-back attitude toward life. It can be frustrating, but there's a charm to it. You ask someone to come over for dinner at 8, and they won't show up until 9, out of respect for you, so that you have more time. [Laughs.] That's their justification. But I sort of love that.

Color you look best in? Blue. It's always been my color.

Most makeup you've ever had to wear for a role? Earlier this year, for the show called The Magicians on Syfy. It took nine hours a day to put the makeup on. The prosthetics were insane. And it was a very hard shoot because when we were doing it Vancouver was burning, and the soot and the heat was oppressive, and I was wearing this incredible makeup that turned me into a half-man, half-peacock. But it's the greatest name of a character ever: The Great Cock of the Darkling Woods. I mean, c'mon.

If it took nine hours every day, that couldn't have left much time to shoot. Exactly. You're only allowed to be on set for 12 hours, so it was nine hours of makeup and three hours of filming. Then we'd take it all off, come back the next day and do it all again. It was totally insane.

Did Star Trek give you a lot of cred with your kids? Yes, it did. But also a lot of eye-rolling, because they're my kids.

The character of Raza: Is he misunderstood or just pure evil? He might be pure evil to others, but I think in order to play a character like that, you have to find the justification of why he's doing what he does.

Favorite thing to eat from craft services? I stay away from craft services like it's the plague! [Laughs.] I know the second I start frequenting that, the costume is not gonna fit and we'll be headed for disaster. It's crazy what they serve. I have never understood why they do that. All those Snickers thingies and the ice cream? No, no, no!

Biggest audition nightmare? There have been a couple, but one was funny because I knew exactly where it was going. It was very early in my career, and I auditioned for this role in a TV movie, and of course, it was to play a 7-Eleven guy getting held up at gunpoint. I go to the audition and I do the scene, and the director looks at me and he goes, "That was really good, but the only thing is that you're not being South Asian enough." Then he tried to show me how to be one. [Laughs.] I couldn't really burn any bridges, so I just said, "Ya know, I totally understand what you want, but at this point in my career, I don't think I can make that artistic leap. Thank you so much." [Laughs.]

"When you meet someone who is infinitely funny, you also want to be funny, and you quickly realize, 'Just don't do that.'"

Role you were up for and wanted but didn't get? Yes. A couple. One that stands out, I felt I could have put my personal stamp on it, but when I saw it, the person who did it did an amazing job. That was the role that Naveen Andrews did in The English Patient.

Actor you get mistaken for? There are a few. Of course, Ben Kingsley, because we both have shaved heads, but he's a much better actor than I am. I bow down to him. And then there are a few other actors who do come up.

Ever been intimidated by working with someone? It's not intimidation, really, but one of the first movies I ever did was with John Cleese. Growing up, I loved Monty Python and knew every single word. I could recite episodes. So meeting him for the first time was really one of those amazing moments. And when you meet someone who is infinitely funny, you also want to be funny, and you quickly realize, "Just don't do that." It's like showing your basketball moves to Michael Jordan.

If you weren't an actor, what would you be? I would want to be an architect. I think it's a wonderful balance of art and science and psychology and ergonomics. There's something beautiful about creating a space that's not just attractive but also functional. To me, that challenge is something that's always interested me. ◆

Exit Dance Theatre showcases its knack for storytelling through movement at Gloucester's MAGMA on June 1. The Newburyport-based company debuts five pieces during its performance of Undone, choreographed by troupe founders Fontaine Dubus and Stephen Hayley as well as company members Jen Steeves, Erin Staffiere and Kayla Waldron. Each work incorporates Exit's theater-based style—which focuses on transcending traditional techniques in favor of collaboration and improvisation—and an emphasis on narratives taken from the passions, desires and weaknesses that humans face.

On Aug. 15-18, Houston Ballet brings its extensive repertoire of classic and contemporary works to the the Berkshires' Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival for the first time in nearly 40 years. Artistic director Stanton Welch helms the four-piece program, which includes a Pillow-commissioned world premiere set to a score by David Lang, renowned contemporary composer and co-founder of the boundary-breaking music organization Bang on a Can. The lineup also boasts Welch's notable Clear—an abstract dance for seven men and one woman featuring a harmony by Bach and costumes designed by Michael Kors—in addition to his Excerpts from Sons de L'Ame and Trey McIntyre's In Dreams. Dance devotees also can delight in a pre-show talk before the Aug. 17 performance.

Cambridge Symphony Orchestra conductor Cynthia Woods collaborates with Boston Conservatory choreographer Gianni Di Marco to stage an unusual rendition of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream on June 16. Featuring Mendelssohn's lighthearted score, the semi-staged performance showcases the full orchestra on an elevated platform surrounded by an ensemble of 10 whimsically costumed ballerinas dancing classical choreography that mirrors the music. The New England Conservatory's Young Women's Chorale also helps bring Shakespeare's fairy-filled comedy to life with 33 songstresses and two soprano soloists providing vocal accompaniment.

Q&A with Marsha Parrilla

Rite of Passage

Danza Orgánica artistic director Marsha Parrilla brings her classical training and dance theater expertise to the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum on June 28 and July 12 for Vessel, an hourlong performance that draws a parallel between a sarcophagus and transatlantic slave trade and is inspired by the museum's Life, Death & Revelry exhibit. We chatted with Parrilla to discuss her inspirations, influences and choreographic process.

WHEN DID YOU FIRST KNOW YOU WANTED TO BE A DANCER? I've always danced since I was little. I would recognize how much I loved movement. I grew up in a very religious family, so they forbid me to dance, but I would always find ways to learn choreography, create choreography and create movement on my own.

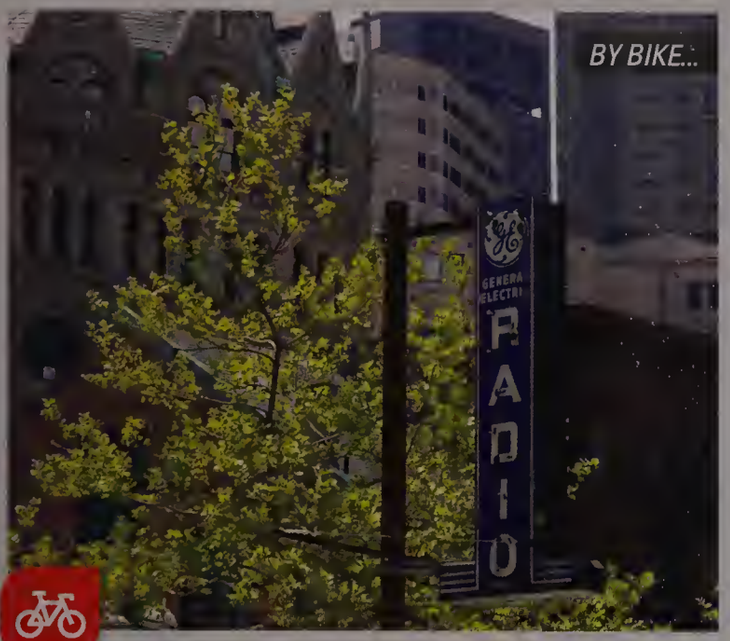
HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR DANCE STYLE? It's organic movement that has influences from the Caribbean and contemporary dance, and it uses movement as a form of healing to represent underrepresented voices. It's movement that comes from within.

WHAT IS YOUR PROCESS WHEN DEVELOPING CHOREOGRAPHY? I spend time doing extensive research before I start thinking about a piece, so I can soak in all the information I can get and hold. I go to museums, listen to music and watch documentaries. All of that information has to get stored in my body. Once I have those things in place, I go to the studio and the movement comes out.

WHAT CAN YOU SHARE ABOUT VESSEL? Vessel is a piece that uses a sarcophagus as a sacred way toward another life in conjunction with the Middle Passage. [I'm] taking both passages and thinking about life, death and rivalry at the point of departure to explore a narrative and bring forth a new outlook. When I looked at the sarcophagus, the first thing that came to mind was that these were naked bodies. ... I thought about the fact that someone was affluent enough to pay for this to be their vehicle to another life. I thought about the time that was spent on this sarcophagus and the money that was put into it. I thought about how it belonged to someone of a higher socioeconomic background and, because of my own background as a Puerto Rican woman, I thought about how my ancestors arrived in Puerto Rico. They also came in a vessel, but the conditions were completely opposite. They were just seen as objects. They were hidden; they were piled up on top of each other; there was no regard for the value of life. I went and thought about the value of life and the value of the body through these two separate cultures and journeys that essentially go from one life to another life and that was the point of departure. We have a narrative that pertains to the Middle Passage and we also have the narrative of reconstruction. Once the Africans of the slave trade are transported to a new place, they have this dance of resistance. I thought it was important to include that in the narrative because there is joy embedded in the sarcophagus and the way that the enslaved Africans found joy was very different. I wanted to bring those two things together.

The Ridotto in Venice

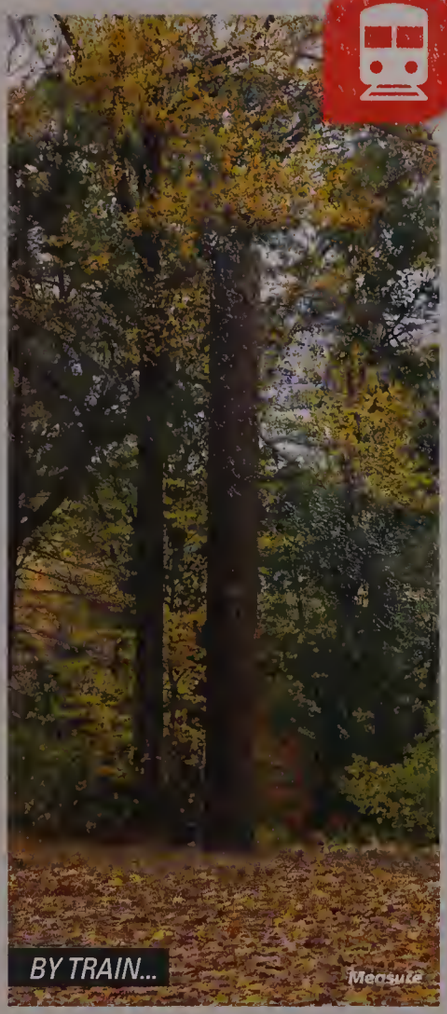
Q&A with Frederick Ilchman



Supernova World

A European getaway is not out of reach this summer, when the Museum of Fine Arts debuts Casanova's Europe: Art, Pleasure and Power in the 18th Century on July 8. Chair of Art of Europe Frederick Ilchman took us on a whirlwind tour of the 275 paintings, sculptures, decorative arts, furniture and costumes—presented in three animated tablcaux—curated through the eyes of renowned womanizer and intellectual Giacomo Casanova and his 12-volume autobiography.

WHICH ARTISTS AND CULTURAL FIGURES DID CASANOVA CROSS PATHS WITH THAT WE'D RECOGNIZE? It's interesting because Casanova's name is in the title of the exhibition, but he's not an artist and he's not a collector. He mentions art from time to time in his memoirs, but he's really more of a connoisseur, let's say, of gossip, social habits, personalities, witty comments. The thing about him though is that he would have been a very discerning observer. Casanova was exactly the kind of person that a mid-18th-century arts patron or statesmen or wealthy society figure would want to impress. He was the ideal audience, the kind of person who would then go to the next place and say, 'Oh, you can't believe the Duke so-and-so's palace. It was so gorgeous. That guy really has taste.' Casanova understood that part of his currency was being well-known, traveling to other places, charming new people. In social media terms, he had an enormous number of likes or friends. Part of his influence was his popularity. ... He does meet a number of artists, but where hc does extremcly well is his remarkable roster of acquaintances with writers and statesmen and political figures. He meets several popes, the king and queen of England, Madame de Pompadour in Paris, Empress Catherine the Grcat in Russia, Benjamin Franklin, the American inventor and statesmen. And the last room of the exhibition is going to include portraits by many artists of great figures. What binds all these people together is they all knew Casanova. ... One of our taglines is: "He went everywhere, met everyone and wrote it all down."

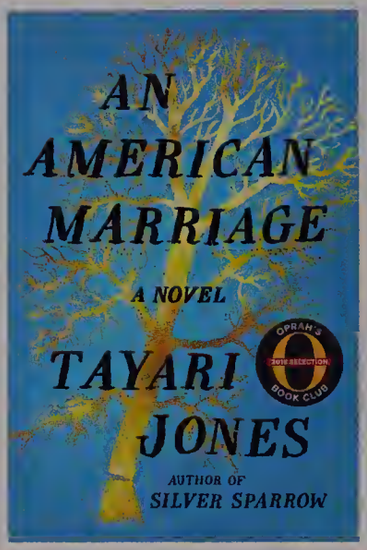


HOW DO YOU THINK CONTEMPORARY AUDIENCES WILL RELATE TO MID-18TH-CENTURY LIFE? His memoir, The History of My Life, is one of the world's longest autobiographies. It is unprecedented in detail of the 18th century and often is used to study the period. People use this autobiography because it just tells so much about who was who, what was important, the settings of places, how people dined and traveled and got around, gossip. But at the same time, he was really writing this for himself. He didn't get it published during his lifetime. He never finished it; it kind of ends mid-paragraph. But he discloses absolutely everything. It can be humiliating. It's very personal. And this is a new thing, this idea of self-disclosure, self-revelation, candor. This is vcry different from earlier ways for people—you know, they make a fake family tree to show they descended from Achilles or Hector. This is really talking as he saw everything. And as he said, he allowed others to judge him. And that's his attitude. So there are a lot of connections there. I think the sense of humor will come across.

WHAT'S ONE OF YOUR CAN'T-MISS PIECES? One that I really love is from the National Portrait Gallery in London by Nathaniel Hone. Kitty Fisher was the number one courtesan in London in the 1760s. This painting was done just after Casanova was there. Casanova figured out this woman's price—at that time, he had a reasonable amount of money that he could pay to spend the night with her. But when he realized that she didn't speak Italian or French and he didn't really speak English, he thought, "What's the point?" If you're going to spend the night with someone, you want to be able to say sweet nothings and witty jokes and have a lot of verbal play going on—to him that was the whole point of romance, or much of the point. But this painting I'm really excited about because there's a wonderful pun in the bottom right corner. You can see the window in the room reflectcd on the fishbowl and the cat is assiduously fishing goldfish.

This summer, the Rose Kennedy Greenway is lit—and no, we're not talking about the return of Trillium's beer garden. GLOW stars eight of local collector Dave Waller's vintage neon signs salvaged from Massachusetts landmarks, illuminated daily from 8 am till 10 pm between India and State Streets. Check out a 1925 art deco General Electric Radio piece that—just two years after neon signs started making their way from Paris to the U.S.—once hung along Roxbury's Blue Hill Avenue. June is even brighter with the arrival of Transition, an interactive commission from Luftwerk duo Petra Bachmaier and Sean Gallero, which takes inspiration from the Big Dig and I-93's tunnel system lights. Somerville artist Anne Lilly also lightens things up when she installs Temple of Mnemon, a kinetic mirror work that comments on individuals' places within a community.

DeCordova Sculpture Park and Museum once again stages its outdoor Platform series, beginning with Saul Melman's Best of All Possible Worlds, which recreates the footprint of his Brooklyn apartment using translucent replicas of doors placed along an east-west axis to capture the sunlight. That's currently joined by Nari Ward's G.O.A.T., three concrete-cast lawn ornaments with discarded sneakers, fire hoses and other found objects that reference the racial and political aspects of athletes and music stars dubbed the Greatest of All Time. And before upcoming projects by Nancy Winship Milliken and others appear later this summer, Josephine Halvorson branches out with Measure, a 24-foot plank of wood the Boston University professor painted after she came upon a fallen tree near her western Massachusetts studio.



Curator Pedro Alonzo—whose resume includes putting together the first Rose Kennedy Greenway mural and organizing French artist JR's 2015 installation on the side of the former John Hancock building—continues the Trustees' Art and the Landscape initiative with Alicja Kwade's TunnelTeller. The Berlin-based artist's first solo commissioned work in the U.S. gains ground at the Crane Estate at Castle Hill through April 2019; and it's another first for the Trustees, this being its inaugural commission for a property once owned by an early-20th-century plumbing magnate who often collaborated with artists. Kwade's reality-altering work spans a spinning clock in Central Park, a mirror installation at 2017's Venice Biennale and this concrete-and-steel work, inspired by the national landmark's former hedge maze, that offers views of Cape Ann and Crane Beach.

Beginning May 26, Peabody Essex Museum will be full of pure inspiration. In addition to mixed-media sculptures, installations and drawings that answer nature's call, Wild Designs highlights two dozen natural-born prototypes and projects, from Swiss engineer George de Mestral's burrs-inspired Velcro—which struck him while hiking with his dog—to another sticky engineering feat from the minds of UMass Amherst researchers: Geckskin, an adhesive based on geckos' toe pads. Breathe in a plant-based air purifier sprung from NASA research or drink in a moisture-collecting Warka Water Tower that creates potable H2O from thin air. Taking a cue from Namibian desert beetles, designer Arturo Vittori's invention can save rural communities hours of trekking to find the nearest water source.

On Island Time

Q&A with Elin Hilderbrand

For Nantucket-based author Elin Hilderbrand, life's a beach. With 20 novels under her belt and her latest hitting shelves on June 19, Hilderbrand's tomes have become a staple in every bookworm's beach bag. We caught up with the best-selling author ahead of her appearance at the seventh annual Nantucket Book Festival on June 15-17 to chat about writing longhand, her love for the island and her latest novel, The Perfect Couple—Hilderbrand's first murder mystery. / Julia Aparicio

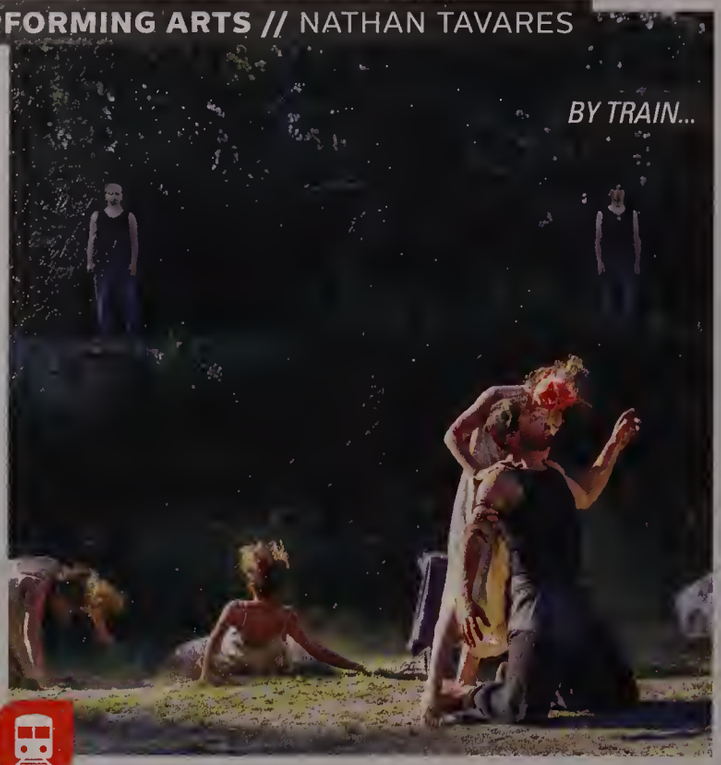
HOW DID YOU GET INTO WRITING? I was in second grade and at the end of the year my teacher gave every child in the class an award and mine was the top author award. As soon as she said it, I thought, "Yes, I am an author!" In college, I majored in writing seminars at Johns Hopkins University. I asked one of my professors, "How do you go about becoming a writer? What should I do?" And he said, "You have to go out in the world and live." So I moved to New York City and then I got a job up in Westchester County. I had a summer off and had grown up spending summers down the Cape, so I thought I would try out Nantucket. I got a room in a house and absolutely fell in love with it and ended up leaving New York and moving to Nantucket in 1994. In the offseason, I decided to travel. I went all over Southeast Asia, New Zealand, Australia. I climbed to Mount Everest base camp and then the second year, I went to South America, the Galapagos and Costa Rica. Feeling like I had sufficiently lived, I applied to the University of Iowa Writers' Workshop. But when I got to Iowa I was miserable. I missed home, I missed Nantucket and I missed the water. To make myself feel better, I started writing a novel that was set on Nantucket.

DO YOU NORMALLY MAP OUT A STORY AHEAD OF TIME OR DIVE RIGHT IN? I dive right in. With my latest book, I didn't know who did it until I was about two-thirds of the way through. I never know what's going to happen until it's happening and I'm writing it. A lot of times, I go in with this vague idea of how I want the book to end, but it's hardly ever plot points. It's more like I want a type of outcome, but the specifics are all figured out in the course of the writing. It's an adventure for me.



WHAT DOES A TYPICAL DAY OF WRITING LOOK LIKE FOR YOU? I write longhand in notebooks, so I always take them with me and I'm always doing work. On a perfect day, I'll write from 11 to 6, and in that seven hours I'll get three hours of composing done. That's what I aim for, but I give myself plenty of leeway because we get distracted, we procrastinate. So I give myself seven hours to get three hours of extremely concentrated, focused work done.

HOW DOES THE ISLAND INFLUENCE YOUR WORK? The island is in every single page. It's the biggest inspiration in my life—I have such a profound attachment to it. It's not only the physical aesthetic of Nantucket that I love—which I do—but I also love the community and the relationships that I have with the other people that live here because a lot of times it forms the human drama that is portrayed in my books.

Actor, comedian and author John Hodgman travels to the Harvard Book Store on June 1 to discuss Vacationland: True Stories from Painful Beaches. In his latest work, the funnyman steps away from his usual quips based around false facts—a la his humor on The Doily Show with Jon Stewort—for a more honest approach as he faces the reality of his 40s. Through essay-like stories set in western Massachusetts and coastal Maine, Hodgman explores the surrealism of full-blown adulthood through the lens of his childhood landscapes and, despite the profound nature of these topics, manages to squeeze his signature wit into every page—along with anecdotes about mustaches, freshwater clams and eclectic Mainers.

If you're on the lookout for alfresco theater, Theater in the Open stages Medea by the ancient Greek playwright Euripides under the dappled shade of trees in Newburyport's Maudslay State Park from July 7 to Aug. 19. First performed in 431 BC, the tragedy follows the titular woman in her machinations to punish her unfaithful husband at an extreme cost—complete with a classic Greek deus ex machina. Give yourself plenty of time to stroll the grounds before the performance for a free afternoon of forestry and feminism.

Think Law & Order: Special Victims Unit by way of Ready Player One for Flat Earth Theatre's production of The Nether at the Mosesian Center for the Arts, the final production in the Watertown company's 12th season. This Boston-area premiere of Jennifer Haley's dramatic mystery takes place both in the real world of the near future and in the Nether—the garden of digital delights previously known as the internet. After Det. Morris begins investigating a mysterious figure named Papa who presides over a hedonistic corner of the Nether, she soon questions human nature and the morality of technology. Swipe right when The Nether electrifies on June 8-23.

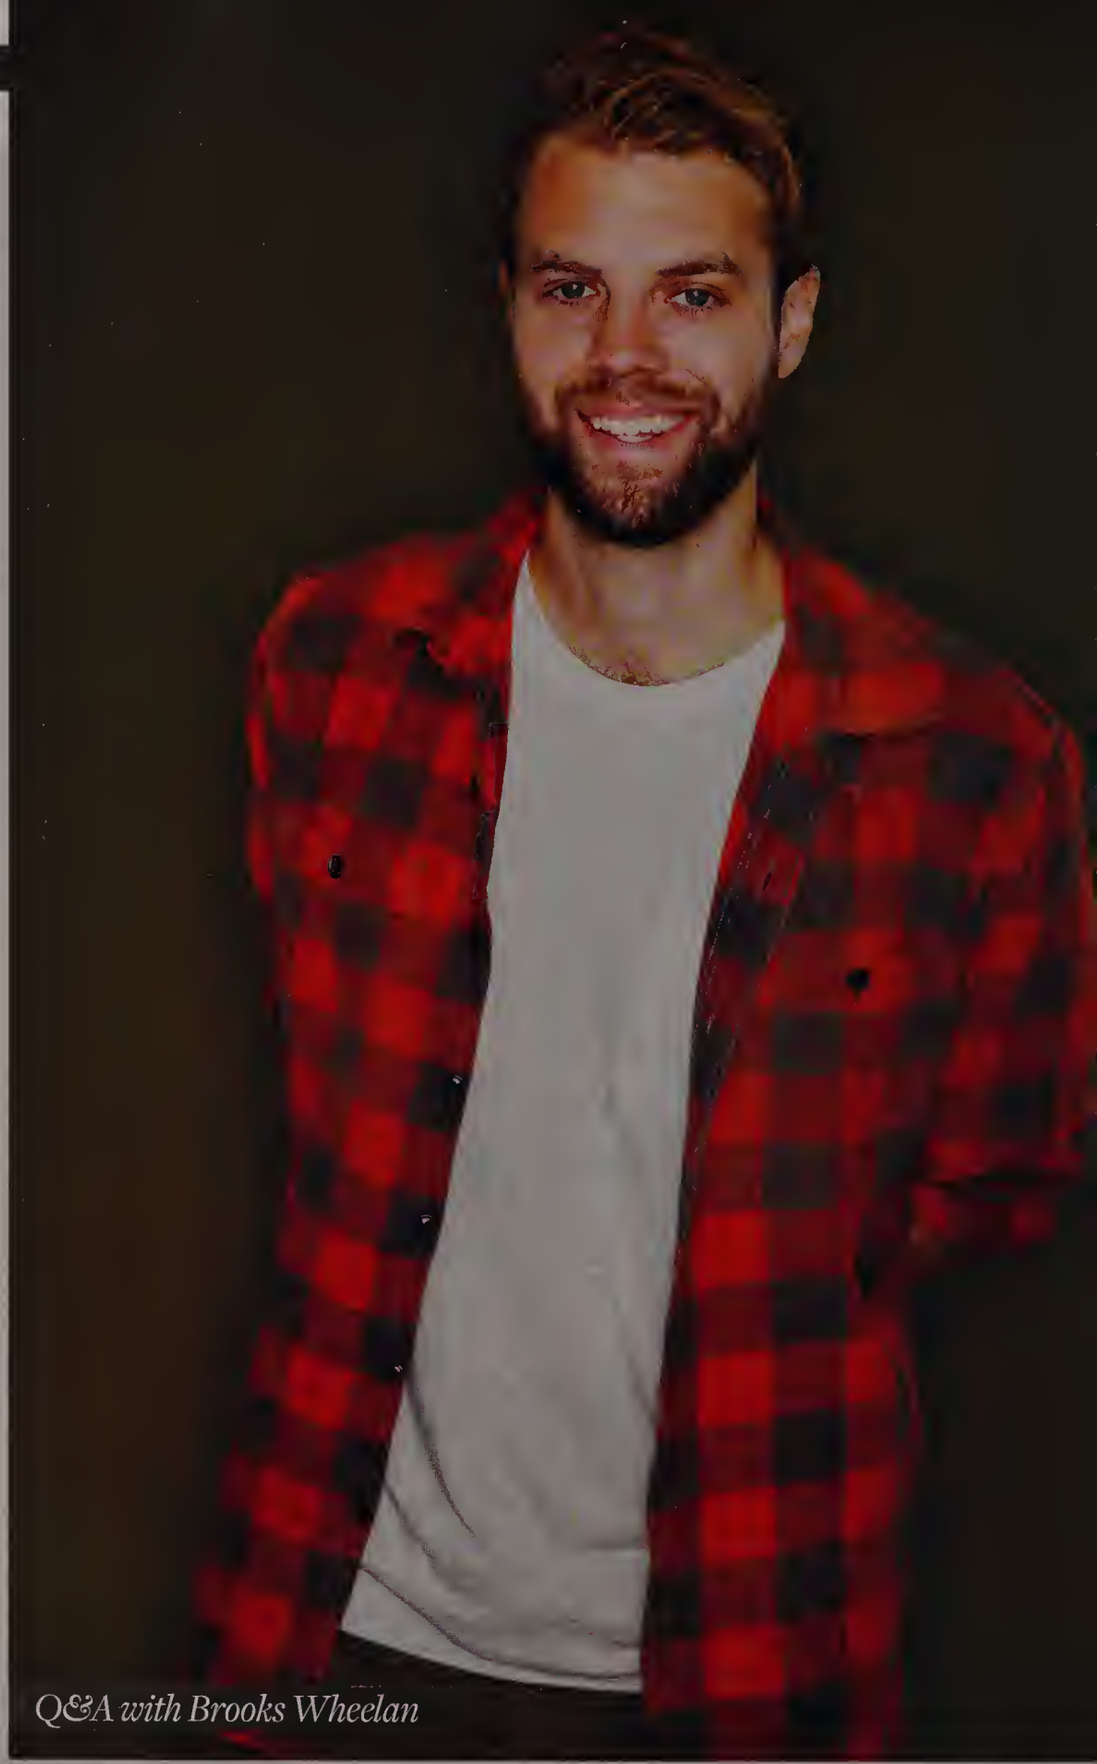
Just like every summer, drag queen Varla Jean Merman brings a world-premiere production to the Art House on the beachy bohemia of Provincetown from June 22 to Aug. 31. In Under a Big Top, presented by Mark Cortale and co-written with Jacques Lamarre, Varla sashays to the center of the ring in a circus-themed cabaret featuring pop parodies. No Doubt's "Don't Speak" is reimagined as a mime love triangle and Pharrell's "Happy" turns into "Hairy" and is sung by the bearded lady. Grab a couple of pre-show cocktails and this high-camp circus will feel like the greatest show on earth.

Matthew Broderick steps into the spotlight for the world premiere of The Closet at the Williamstown Theatre Festival, directed by Mark Brokaw. Inspired by the French play Le Placard, Douglas Carter Beane penned this comedic satire that bucks political correctness as it follows Martin, portrayed by Broderick, who is stuck in a rut in Scranton after his marriage fails. When a handsome stranger comes to town, Martin is forced to kick open the doors of his personal closet and celebrate discovering love in unexpected places. Get hung up when The Closet runs June 26-July 14.

On the Level

For the past year, local playwright John J. King has been dreaming up a half-drowned Boston in the year 2072 for his play Martha's (b)Rainstorm, a climate change fairy tale written in partnership with Fresh Ink Theatre and the Boston Public Library during its first playwright residency in 2016-17. After many drafts, workshops and a February reading of outtakes, King, Fresh Ink and director Stephanie LeBolt are finally ready to stage the play at the Boston Center for the Arts on June 7-15. We chatted with King about sea levels and Sox games in futuristic Boston.

HOW DOES YOUR FUTURISTIC BOSTON DIFFER FROM TODAY? The water has risen 18 feet above 2018 levels, and the city has done a lot to adapt. Back Bay is a series of canals called Little Venice; the Public Garden is the Public Pond and the water comes all the way to Charles Street (the Common is still safe); the Seaport has been walled and moated to protect from flooding and is now Seaport Island, an upper-class gated community you need a special ID to enter (this protection of Seaport has essentially forced Southie completely underwater). Not as much of a plot point, but interesting context: In the world of the play, Harvard has helped pay to redirect the Charles through Allston (basically where Western Avenue is) to link the stadium and business school with the central campus and add a buffer of protection. And Fenway Park isn't flooded but is iffy enough that Red Sox home games are played at Suffolk Downs until they can relocate the stadium.



HOW DID THE COLLABORATION WITH FRESH INK THEATRE AND THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY WORK? This was the first year that any of us did this, so there were a lot of "how does this function"-type questions that we had to work out. It was really great in terms of the library being super-supportive. I went in and did a lot of research there. Their research librarians pulled a lot of old newspaper clippings and microfilm for me. They have a huge trove of records from the American Revolution period and just local news throughout New England history, and that was really exciting to be able to dive into.

HOW DID YOU GET THE IDEA FOR THE PLAY? The core idea of feeling overwhelmed by all the many, many things going on in the world and wanting to have an impact—but you know it's just so hard to do when your life takes so much time—has always stayed with me. And I have always had a real interest and passion for diving into climate change, and figuring out what's going on in the world and how it continues to deteriorate in a lot of ways without much action. When Fresh Ink came to me, and asked me to pitch some ideas for this yearlong process, I'd been thinking about both of those things and it suddenly dawned on me: "Oh, this is actually kind of a really great mix to have a woman who wants to do something about climate change, and that's such a huge problem, and it feels very overwhelming for one person to take on."

WHAT RESOURCES DID YOU USE TO EXTRAPOLATE THE EFFECTS OF CLIMATE CHANGE? I had a lot of conversations with scientists in the area, many of who are actively working on this problem and this data on their own and many of who are working on it with the city. I have a good friend who is a marine biologist, who does a lot of lab work and teaches at UMass Boston. And I randomly ran into him literally two days after Fresh Ink and I sort of signed on to do this. He said, "What are you working on?" I said, "This climate change play." He said, "Hey, two weeks from now, myself and a team of scientists and city planners are going on a cruise of the harbor to help put together a plan for the mayor. Any interest in joining us?" So that was sort of an amazing first trip where I met a lot of the people who are not only doing a lot of the research but actively involved with the city of Boston in terms of making plans for what the city is going to do.

DID A LOT OF THE PLAY CHANGE AS A RESULT OF WORKSHOPS? Yeah. Huge amounts changed from workshops. Kind of leading up to the night in February, Fresh Ink and I did a workshop of what was then a separate full draft. And I felt like the script was really solid and doing some interesting things, but it was really almost like an Arthur Miller play. It was very much people in offices arguing over what to do about climate change. And then we did that presentation in the library of some stuff that wasn't in that script, but that was a little more wacky and fun, and I saw that, and I saw the audience's reaction to it, and I was like, "This is why I've been a little bit bored and frustrated in these rehearsals. It's missing this really playful spirit and it had turned into this, like, political drama about city government red tape."

Brooks, Brother

Q&A with Brooks Wheelan

Actor and comedian Brooks Wheelan knows how to take a joke—especially at his own expense. With credits on HBO's Girls, NBC's Late Night with Seth Meyers and a stint as a writer and cast member on Saturday Night Live, Wheelan is bringing his brand of self-deprecating humor on tour this summer. We caught up with the stand-up comedian before he takes the stage at Laugh Boston on July 8.

WHAT'S THE FORMAT OF YOUR SHOW LIKE? Just straight stand-up. I riff and tell jokes and stories. Actually, imagine if I said magic. That would make it interesting. Can that be my answer? My show is full-blown magic. Full-blown magic—with tigers. That's my final answer.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE TOPIC TO JOKE ABOUT? Myself. I suppose that's who I make the most fun of pretty consistently. Mistakes in my life and not learning from said mistakes.

DO YOU PREFER PERFORMING ON STAGE OR IN FRONT OF THE CAMERA? Stage, for sure. It's great. It's immediate feedback and also you can pivot: If something's not working, you can bail on it and go to something else. [Laughs.]

YOU WENT TO COLLEGE FOR BIOMEDICAL ENGINEERING. WHAT MADE YOU DECIDE TO GO INTO COMEDY? It's more fun. I pursued medical engineering for four years after college, but I was doing stand-up every night in Los Angeles trying to be able to make that my living.

WHO IS THE FUNNIEST PERSON YOU'VE EVER WORKED WITH? Probably this guy Allen I worked with when I was a biomedical engineer. He was hilarious. He killed me. Allen is definitely the funniest person I have ever worked with.

IF YOU COULD COLLABORATE WITH ANYONE IN THE WORLD, WHO WOULD IT BE AND WHY? I would say Billy Mitchell. Billy Mitchell is the guy who held all the records for best video game scores in the world and he just got stripped of all his titles because he was cheating. I just want to pick his brain. He's also in the hot sauce industry, and that's an industry I wouldn't mind stepping into—I would collaborate with him in a heartbeat.

WHAT DO YOU HOPE CROWDS TAKE AWAY FROM YOUR SHOW? Hopefully they just leave having a good time. I hope they leave being like, "Shit, we should really do that more often!" That's what I hope people walk away from my show thinking, "We should go out and do more different types of things." I think going to see live stand-up comedy is a cool thing that people don't do that often. If they leave my show and want to do it again, that's really all I could ask for.

Q&A with Aaron Dessner

Calling Card

Boston Calling just keeps getting bigger. A year after moving from City Hall Plaza to the Harvard Athletic Complex, the three-day festival on May 25-27 is adding a film component curated by Harvard alum Natalie Portman as well as a live show from Pod Save America to its offerings. The music lineup includes headliners Eminem, the Killers and Jack White, while comedians such as Jenny Slate and Cameron Esposito also take the stage. Boston Calling co-curator Aaron Dessner plays with his band, the National, on opening night, and the musician chatted with us about this year's fest.

ARE YOU STILL ENJOYING YOUR ROLE AS CO-CURATOR? Yeah, I've played it since the beginning. It's been really exciting to see how Boston Calling has grown from half the size at City Hall Plaza to now. I think that the move to the Harvard Athletic Complex has allowed us to expand in a way that makes the festival more interesting. We have more performance spaces and we can kind of expand these non-music elements and offer people something deeper. I think the ultimate goal is to create an experience that is a dialogue in a lot of ways. For me, I'm lucky to have these outlets that are related but different than sitting in my house writing songs or being on tour with the band. It's fun to think about community and these gatherings. I've played festivals all over the world for almost 20 years, so I have a sort of good feeling for all these things. The feeling in Boston, and the way it's operated, is really positive.

DID YOU ALWAYS HAVE THIS VISION FOR BOSTON CALLING AS SOMETHING THAT WOULD BECOME AS BIG AS IT IS? No. I think when we first started it, we were like, well, "Who's going to play? We can probably twist the National's arm. They'll do it. And let's see who else will join us." It was really a hands-on, do-it-yourself effort with Brian Appel and the other folks who started it. We really built it from the ground up from nothing. I loved the festival at its smaller size also, but I think ultimately to create an experience that was dynamic and more diverse, where there's a deeper experience and more discovery for the audience, that having the extra space—and it's a nicer space where it is now—was a major thing. It has kind of evolved. So now it's one of the biggest festivals on the East Coast, but that wasn't our reason for being. It kind of happened naturally.

IS THERE AN ASPECT OF THE FESTIVAL THAT YOU'RE REALLY INTERESTED IN SEEING? I'm really excited about everything that Natalie has planned. I think it's going to be incredible, so I'm going to try to catch as much of that as I can. And two of my favorite artists playing today are at the festival. So, Big Thief, who actually just opened a whole tour for us, and they're one of the best live bands I've ever seen. And I would say the same thing about This Is the Kit, which is kind of underground folk music from Kate Stables, who lives in Paris but is actually from Winchester, England. She has one of my favorite voices. And then St. Vincent: I think Annie Clark is a total genius. And Julien Baker, I'm incredibly moved by her performances. And then Perfume Genius I think is great. And with Pod Save America, I'm super-excited to be at a musical festival and have that experience because I would kind of go wherever to see them. So it just feels exciting.

ANYTHING SPECIAL PLANNED FOR THE NATIONAL'S ACT? Yeah. I can't say we've planned it yet, but hopefully there will be some collaboration that happens, maybe an introduction or something. I think this will be our third or fourth time performing Boston Calling, but it's been a few years now. So this will be exciting being in the new setting.

DID YOU LEARN ANY LESSONS FROM LAST YEAR IN THE NEW SETTING THAT YOU'RE INCORPORATING INTO THIS YEAR? We structure the schedule to minimize conflicts for people. Obviously, there's giant artists on the bills like Eminem and the Killers, but there's so much to be discovered also for people who are curious to find some small acts they've never heard before. The one thing I did love about City Hall Plaza was there was no overlap between the two stages, and we've sort of preserved that with the two main stages, which have no overlap. But at the same time, with the third stage we're able to have something concurrent going on that's another current of programming and diversifies things.

Boston gets considerably quieter when the college kids take summer break, but thanks to Berklee College of Music there's still a little bit of noise. The college's Summer in the City Concert Series features more than 400 performances at two dozen venues, including Spectacle Island. The Boston Harbor island hosts Sunday afternoon concerts from July to September with acts such as the Marcus Prince Trio. The Berklee-bred band, with students Marcus Prince, Santanio Jackson and Eric Fells, brings its jazz and R&B mix to the island on July 22.

As if you actually needed a programming reason to visit Tanglewood this summer, the Bernstein Centennial Celebration on Aug. 25 is the culmination of the seasonlong fete of the late Leonard Bernstein, who was born in Lawrence in 1918. Former and present conductors such as Andris Nelsons, Keith Lockhart and John Williams take part in the concert gala, along with cellist Yo-Yo Ma, Audra MacDonald and a number of other vocalists. The first half of the program showcases Bernstein's hits from musicals such as West Side Story, Candide and Serenade, while the second half includes Bernstein's personal favorites from Mahler and Copland as well as a new piece from Williams. When the night finishes with Mahler's Resurrection, you might just rise up out of your seat—or off your blanket—yourself.

Rhiannon Giddens is a genius—there's even proof. In October, the singer won one of MacArthur's $625,000 Genius Grants and she has since lined up projects with orchestras, a ballet and the Smithsonian. But you can catch her brilliance in person on June 15 as part of the Lowell Summer Music Series at Boarding House Park. The lead singer of the Grammy-winning Carolina Chocolate Drops, she's recently turned out two solo albums, including last year's Freedom Highway. That record was nominated for album of the year at the Americana Music Honors & Awards—even more evidence that the 41-year-old is wise beyond her years.

The Red Sox-Yankees rivalry might be back this year, but that doesn't mean it's the hottest ticket at Fenway Park. As country music fans know, that honor is likely to go to the Zac Brown Band's two shows at the lyrical little bandbox on June 15-16. The group sold out seven straight Fenway shows over a three-year period, and they're back for more this summer on their Down the Rabbit Hole Live tour. The nationwide swing, which stops at a dozen ballparks, supports last year's Welcome Home album that debuted at No. 2 on the Billboard 200. The first two of 10 concerts at Fenway Park this season, it's a must-see doubleheader.

JUST CHEESING Comedian Liza Treyger's social media handles borrow the name of her 2015 comedy album, Glittercheese, which breezily bounces from irony-laden tales of calling her parents from jail to getting sassed by teenage girls at a Miley Cyrus concert. Born in the former Soviet Union before moving to Illinois as a child, Treyger is a self-described "casual feminist." She takes to the stage with a number of guest spots and specials under her belt—including a 2015 Comedy Central special filmed at Royale. LIFE OF THE PARTY ★★★

Melissa McCarthy reteams with husband Ben Falcone for their third collaboration after Tammy and The Boss. This charming college comedy, co-written by the couple and directed by Falcone, is easily the best of the three. And while dynamo McCarthy built her reputation playing dimwitted forces of nature like her Oscar-nominated character in Bridesmaids, she's working in a far more thoughtful mode in this film. Think of her Deanna as a cousin of Susan, McCarthy's character in Paul Feig's 2015 action comedy Spy. Both transform from put-upon women into newfound versions of their best selves, freed from longtime perceptions that have kept them boxed in. In both cases, the women are able to tap into their hibernating sexuality with liberating results. Immediately after Deanna and her husband Dan (Matt Walsh) drop off their daughter Maddie (Molly Gordon of TNT's Animal Kingdom) for her final year of college at her parents' alma mater, Dan abruptly dumps his wife, confessing to infidelity and requesting a divorce. Reassessing her life choices, Deanna decides to complete the final year of the archaeology degree she put on hold when she became pregnant during her senior year of college. Soon—and to the initial dismay of Maddie—Deanna settles back into college life with surprising ease, making fast friends with her daughter's sorority sisters while sowing her oats with frat boy Jack (Luke Benward), with who she shares an amusing connection. Surprisingly sweet-natured, this is an enjoyable return to school. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.) / Brett Michel

AVENGERS: INFINITY WAR ★★★1/2 Even at two and-a-half hours, this 19th movie set within the ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe wouldn't seem to have the time necessary to service the more than two dozen characters that star in Avengers: Infinity War. But against all odds, nearly all of Marvel's superheroes get a moment to shine as they team up to stop the biggest threat that the world—and the galaxy—has ever faced. Picking up moments after the conclusion of last year's comic gem, Thor: Ragnarok, brothers Joe and Anthony Russo (directors of the past two Captain America pictures) take viewers on a significantly darker ride, dropping us into a devastating attack on the transport ship that was housing Thor (Chris Hemsworth) and the remnants of his Asgardian civilization, perpetrated by the purple-skinned, golden-armored Thanos. Portrayed in a superbly understated motion-capture performance by Josh Brolin, this towering figure plans to bring balance to the universe by indiscriminately wiping out half of all life. Marvel favorites like Cap (Chris Evans), Spider-Man (Tom Holland), Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Doctor Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch) and the Guardians of the Galaxy (Chris Pratt et al.) pair off into unexpected and pleasurable groupings spanning five or six concurrent plotlines, culminating in a devastating ending that packs a wallop. Recalling a classical tragedy like The Empire Strikes Back, Infinity War shakes up the status quo, leaving you hungry for next year's as-yet-untitled sequel. And like the next issue of your favorite comic, it can't come soon enough. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Book Club ★★ Imagine a reality where your life is forever changed by reading E.L. James' Fifty Shades of Grey series as part of the monthly, wine-infused book club you enjoy with three of your lifelong buds. Personally, I couldn't even conceive of dragging any of my friends to the awful movie adaptations of these books, but they're hardly the target audience for this unintentionally hilarious "erotica." My friends also wouldn't get much out of filmmaker Bill Holderman's Book Club, which functions as a vastly more upscale, easy laugh update of The Golden Girls. In other words, I'd take my retired mother in a heartbeat to see this movie about a widow (Diane Keaton) who's ready for new adventures—and is soon picked up by a handsome airline pilot (Andy Garcia) after he spots her embarrassingly enjoying a copy of James' best-selling "mommy porn." I'm sure my mom would laugh uproariously at the Viagra gag that makes for an outstanding scene between Diane's chef pal Carol (Mary Steenburgen) and her husband Bruce (Craig T. Nelson), but who knows how she'd react to divorced federal judge Sharon (Candice Bergen) and her internet dates or single hotelier Vivian (Jane Fonda) and her sexual appetite. They'd certainly give her a lot to talk about at the retirement home, though! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport and in the suburbs.)

Deadpool 2 ★ Here's the official plot synopsis for Deadpool 2, courtesy of 20th Century Fox: "After surviving a near fatal bovine attack, a disfigured cafeteria chef (Wade Wilson) struggles to fulfill his dream of becoming Mayberry's hottest bartender, while also learning to cope with his lost sense of taste. Searching to regain his spice for life, as well as a flux capacitor, Wade must battle ninjas, the yakuza and a pack of sexually aggressive canines, as he journeys around the world to discover the importance of family, friendship, and flavor—finding a new taste for adventure and earning the coveted coffee mug title of World's Best Lover." If only. Despite the studio's claims, ex-special forces operative Wilson (Ryan Reynolds) is actually back for more of the same in his second go-round as Deadpool. But if "The Merc with a Mouth" was the class clown when last we saw him, he's graduated to becoming the hanger-on who hurls insults—plus an inexplicable stream of pop culture references that might be funny if you're the one who enjoys Family Guy. Surprisingly, Deadpool 2 has become the very thing the first film laughed at. Poking fun at superhero movie conventions doesn't excuse you from adhering to them. And while director David Leitch (Atomic Blonde, John Wick) is working with a fraction of the budget of, say, Avengers: Infinity War, he's also made a film with a fraction of that picture's entertainment value. But at least one person should enjoy themselves: After playing villains in both films, Josh Brolin must be laughing all the way to the bank. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Disobedience ★★★ Chilean director Sebastián Lelio follows up A Fantastic Woman with his English-language debut, a romantic drama that bears a passing resemblance to his Oscar-winning foreign language film from last year. Another picture that ably demonstrates his amazing touch with actresses, Disobedience stands alongside 2013's Gloria, Lelio's intimate and empowering exploration of a woman finding herself. Although Rachel Weisz plays the film's central figure, Ronit Krushka, who returns to the Orthodox Jewish community in London that she fled for New York, it's Rachel McAdams as her childhood best friend, Esti Kuperman, who's the conflicted standout. Lelio's latest, which he's adapted with Rebecca Lenkiewicz from Naomi Alderman's novel, starts with Ronit returning for the funeral of her estranged father, a beloved rabbi. As we gradually discover the reasons behind Ronit's departure and new life as a photographer, her relationships with both Esti and her husband, Dovid Kuperman (Boston native Alessandro Nivola), come into focus. Ronit is stunned to find that the two are married, and tensions mount as Dovid dutifully invites her to stay as the couple's houseguest. Soon, old passions come bubbling toward the surface, threatening to tear apart the society that shunned her long ago. Though a hugely sensual film, it lacks the subtleties of Lelio's earlier pictures. Nevertheless, it's worth seeing for the portraits of repressed emotions, particularly those of Esti, who's imbued with heartbreaking soul by McAdams. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

First Reformed ★★★1/2 Four decades ago, Paul Schrader made his name when he wrote the screenplays for Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver (1976) and Raging Bull (1980). If he'd done nothing else, the 71-year-old's place in cinema history would be secure. However, he also directed 23 movies, many of which he also wrote. And while pictures like American Gigolo (1980) and his remake of 1942's Cat People (1982) found their audiences, it's his scripts for Scorsese that have defined his career. So, it's only fitting that his newest film as a writer/director works as a spiritual successor to his earliest collaboration with Scorsese. It's also damn near a masterpiece. Ethan Hawke plays the Rev. Ernst Toller, a solitary, hard-drinking pastor at a small Dutch Reform church that functions primarily as a tourist spot in upstate New York, because of its early history as a stop along the Underground Railroad. First Reformed, as it's called, is soon to be celebrating its 250th anniversary, but its dwindling congregation has been eclipsed by Abundant Life, its nearby parent church that caters to a flock of thousands with its state-of-the-art facilities. Toller still has his dedicated parishioners, including Mary (Amanda Seyfried). Pregnant and in need of help, she enlists Toller's aid in counseling her husband, Michael (Philip Ettinger), a radical environmentalist who's lost his way. And while Schrader doesn't quite possess the filmmaking prowess of Scorsese, he frames his deeply troubling look at a crisis of faith as a spellbinding sermon you can't look away from. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

RBG ★★1/2 If anyone deserved a better biographical treatment, it's the Supreme Court justice at the center of Julie Cohen and Betsy West's RBG, which tells the life story of Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Frustratingly superficial, the documentary leaves you simply wanting to know more about the diminutive, opera-loving 85-year-old. Illustrated with old photos and cursory interviews with a handful of those who've known her, it's a boilerplate portrait that you wish rose above the level of basic hagiography. Still, there's a bit of enlightenment to be found as the movie follows the transformation of "the notorious RBG" from a feminist lawyer, arguing against gender discrimination before an all-male Supreme Court, to the liberal-leaning dissenter who now sits among them. Unfortunately, other than focusing on her relationship with her late husband, Martin, and her surprising friendship with late right-wing Justice Antonin Scalia, there's very little you haven't heard before about the unexpected pop culture icon. The fleeting insights leave you thirsting for more info about the moderate, middle-of-the-road Democrat, whether it's the 13 years she spent as an appellate judge in federal court or the period leading up to her nomination to the Supreme Court by President Bill Clinton. If there's any justice in this world, we'll get a fuller picture of Ginsburg soon. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Rider ★★★★ Two of the best films out right now are under-the-radar dramas featuring aimless young men and their connections with nature, specifically with horses in forgotten parts of America. I've previously rhapsodized about Andrew Haigh's heartbreaking Lean on Pete, but arguably even better is Chloé Zhao's experimental drama that merges fact with fiction to produce a drama of understated power. Utilizing real Sioux cowboys on locations in South Dakota's Pine Ridge Reservation—frequently during the magic hour by cinematographer Joshua James Richards—Zhao (writer/director of 2015's Songs My Brothers Taught Me) presents the semi-fictional tale of a rodeo rider named Brady Blackburn (Brady Jandreau), who has suffered a career-ending skull fracture. As we follow his recovery, we're gradually introduced to his hard-drinking, gambling-addicted dad and autistic teenage sister (played by Jandreau's real-life father and sister), his horseman buddies and finally, his best friend, Lane Scott (playing himself), a fellow casualty of the rodeo circuit who's lost the ability to walk or even speak. The patience and love that Brady shows his former mentor can't be faked. You can feel what both men have lost, having sealed their fates in 8 seconds or less. There's an old saying about dusting yourself off and climbing back onto a horse after a fall, but as some of the best films set in the Old West have demonstrated, reality can be a hell of a lot tougher to accept than the myths we grew up with. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Super Troopers 2 ★★ Seventeen years after attempting to make a name for themselves with Super Troopers, the Broken Lizard comedy troupe still has yet to find mainstream success. So rather than even try, they play to the cheap seats with their latest, the unimaginatively titled sequel that few asked for, Super Troopers 2. Jay Chandrasekhar once again directs, working from a "loose script" by himself and fellow Broken Lizard compatriots Steve Lemme, Paul Soter, Erik Stolhanske and Kevin Heffernan, who suit up once again (in slightly larger uniforms) as Vermont state troopers Thorny, Mac, Foster, Rabbit and Farva, respectively. But even though the troopers are preaching to the choir, you can't accuse them of not knowing their audience. After all, the film was released on 4/20 and features a scene where one of the officers, in a drug-fueled hallucination, imagines that the "Highway Patrol" sign on the wall behind Capt. O'Hagan (Brian Cox, cashing a check) actually reads "Way High Patrol." (Ho-ho!) The former patrolmen have been called back into service when a land dispute at the Canadian border (in reality, Massachusetts, in and around the Quabbin Reservoir) threatens to redraw the local maps, angering the local Canuck population, who are "soorry" to hear they're about to be branded American citizens. Meanwhile, a turf battle erupts between the reactivated troopers and their Mountie counterparts (Hayes MacArthur, Tyler Labine and Will Sasso). In other words, you'll have little trouble following the plot, especially if you're high. (At Assembly Row and South Bay.)

MUSIC

CHAOS THEORY

Dreamy synth-pop and cartoons starring a sociopathic scientist typically don't go hand-in-hand. That is, until the Seattle sister act Chaos Chaos found a fan in Justin Roiland, the co-creator of cult TV hit Rick and Morty. Chaos Chaos' haunting "Do You Feel It?" packed an emotional gut-punch to the end of a surprisingly dark 2015 episode of the cartoon—skyrocketing the duo's Spotify streams and leading to two new tracks, including the goofy pastiche "Terryfold," which managed to chart on Billboard's Hot Rock Songs in September. Asya and Chloe Saavedra originally began releasing music in 2000 under the name Smoosh and embraced a new band name and sound driven by epic synths and confessional lyrics on a pair of EPs released in 2014 and 2015. The two siblings are fresh off the April release of their single "Pink Politics" and have a full-length album due later this year—but first, get chaotic with Chaos Chaos at the Middle East on June 3. / Nathan Tavares

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

TOP OF THE LINE In its latest exhibit, the Discipline of Forming, Alpha Gallery celebrates the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Center for Advanced Visual Studies at MIT with an examination of works by Hungarian-born artist and author György Kepes. This collection of the late artist's paintings showcases Kepes' distinct use of lines and colors, such as in his piece Image, which uses lines balanced out by soft strokes as well as bright hues contrasting with cool colors—a sort of stability amid chaos. Come get in line at Alpha Gallery and catch the Discipline of Forming through May 30. / Julia Aparicio

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

CHARLESMARK HOTEL AND LOUNGE [655 Boylston Street, Boston, 617- 247-1212, Charlesmarkhotel.com] 40 room Luxury boutique hotel. Located at the marathon finish line across from the BPL. Location, value and ambiance are keys to their success. The lounge is a stylish popular neighborhood after work location featuring Martinis and flatbread pizzas. Wine tasting parties are famous here. Private event space available. Coming this fall a new restaurant concept. Stay tuned.

HARBORSIDE INN AND LUXURY LOUNGE [185 State Street, Boston, 617-723-7500, Harborsideinnbostom.com] 116 room boutique hotel, Location, value and stylish décor are the trademarks of this popular hotel. The Luxury lounge inside the hotel features after work entertainment. Fridays and Saturdays provide a DJ and dancing. The space is available for Private Events. State of the art lights and sound with custom high end design make this a hidden gem.

Brunch

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays. Grill centric favorites include the North Carolina Pulled Pork & Eggs, Eggs Diablo, and The Burger Benedict Deluxe. Enjoy all with glasses or pitchers of Back Deck's Jerk Bloody Mary or Berkshire Summer, with craft gin and restaurant squeezed lemonade.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] Join us for our Acoustic Brunch as Chef Owner Jamie Mammano puts his modern spin on classic brunch dishes. Our impressive bar offers a variety of craft cocktails and playful options for Bloody Mary's! Brunch served Sunday's from 10am to 2pm. Breakfast and Lunch served weekdays, Dinner daily. Mooo.... also offers an impressive Wine Cellar and private Parlor Suites; the solution to successful business or social entertaining. Open All Major Holidays, adjacent to XV Beacon Hotel.

TYIN' ON THE FEEDBAG

Boston's biggest dinner party, LifeSavor, kicked off with a raucous cocktail party at the Langham and continued with private dinners at the best restaurants and private party venues in town.

A benefit for Community Servings, the evening attracted an A-list crowd that included board chair Karen Bressler and the dashing Scott Epstein, smolderingly sexy pair Robert Wilson and Sergio Mendez, ageless beauty Michela Larson, latter-day Cary Grant Tony Corey, real estate babe Sara Cohen, the corkscrew curled Linda Plazonja, reformed male model Jeff Bellows and the stunning Nicole, Dot rat Shawn McBride, beaming newlyweds Marco Mereu and Jessica Stanford, tall drink of water Jay Leo and his handsome husband, Stephen Iacobacci, Hat Sister Timothy O'Connor, bestselling Thai author Amy Hyson and her rock star husband, Oedipus, thespian couple Marshall and Kathy Berenson, mixologist extraordinaire Domingo-Martin Barreres, genius flower designer Marc Hall and so on and so forth.

The Meow Award for cattiest exchange: Referring to the dense crowd, one guest said, "I'm taking a deep dive," to which his friend responded, "Watch your head. This is a pretty shallow gene pool."

However, the evening's wittiest comment came from the man who said, "I'm not a vegan, but the cow my shoes were made from was."

HOW DOES YOUR GARDEN GROW?

Q: What's green and white and breathtakingly gorgeous?

A: The Green and White Ball, a benefit for the Friends of the Public Garden.

The black-tie blowout, held at the Four Seasons, drew an alarmingly attractive crowd, among them: honorees Ron and Julie Druker, co-chairs Tamar Frieze, Ashley Harmon, Jackie McCabe and Jessica Schmitz, the toothsome twosome of Ian and Katherine O'Keefe, celebrity shoe designer Thom Solo and his main squeeze, Tyler Murphy, uber philanthropists Lori and Matthew Sidman, the ethereal Maggie Moran and her smoke-show husband, Bill, adorable equestrian Desmond O'Leary, and one woman who reported this appalling pickup line: "You should be wearing a fascinator, because you're so fascinating."

The ballroom was decked out in flowers from five countries and four states, echoing the plantings in the park, while dinner was superb and at least one person (namely me) wound up overserved.

The evening's funniest remark: "I got my date to come tonight by saying, 'I promise you'll find a husband; I just can't promise he won't be somebody else's.' "

BRAVISSIMI

For 80 years, the Celebrity Series of Boston has been bringing world-class performances to stages throughout the city, and to raise the money needed to do it, the Cyclorama at the BCA was transformed into a glittering party scene for the black-tie Shine! Gala.

The evening began with cocktails and schmoozing and continued with dinner, performances and dancing. Among the philanthropists and socialites on hand: co-chairs Stephanie Brown and Ivana Magovcevic-Liebisch, her handsome husband, Lars, Greenway grand pooh-bah Jesse Brackenbury and his stunning wife, Eileen, London "it" girl Sophie Ali, Teutonic goddess Molly Schoeck and the dashing Guy MacDonald, the swanlike Susie Friedman, the statuesque Susie Gheyssari, impish scamp Kyle Thomas Hemingway, the radiant Sara Robinson, Chinatown panjandrum Giles Li and his gorgeous other half, Sopheak Tek, and one woman who said, "This isn't a cleavage kind of dress. It's more a squashed crack kind of dress."

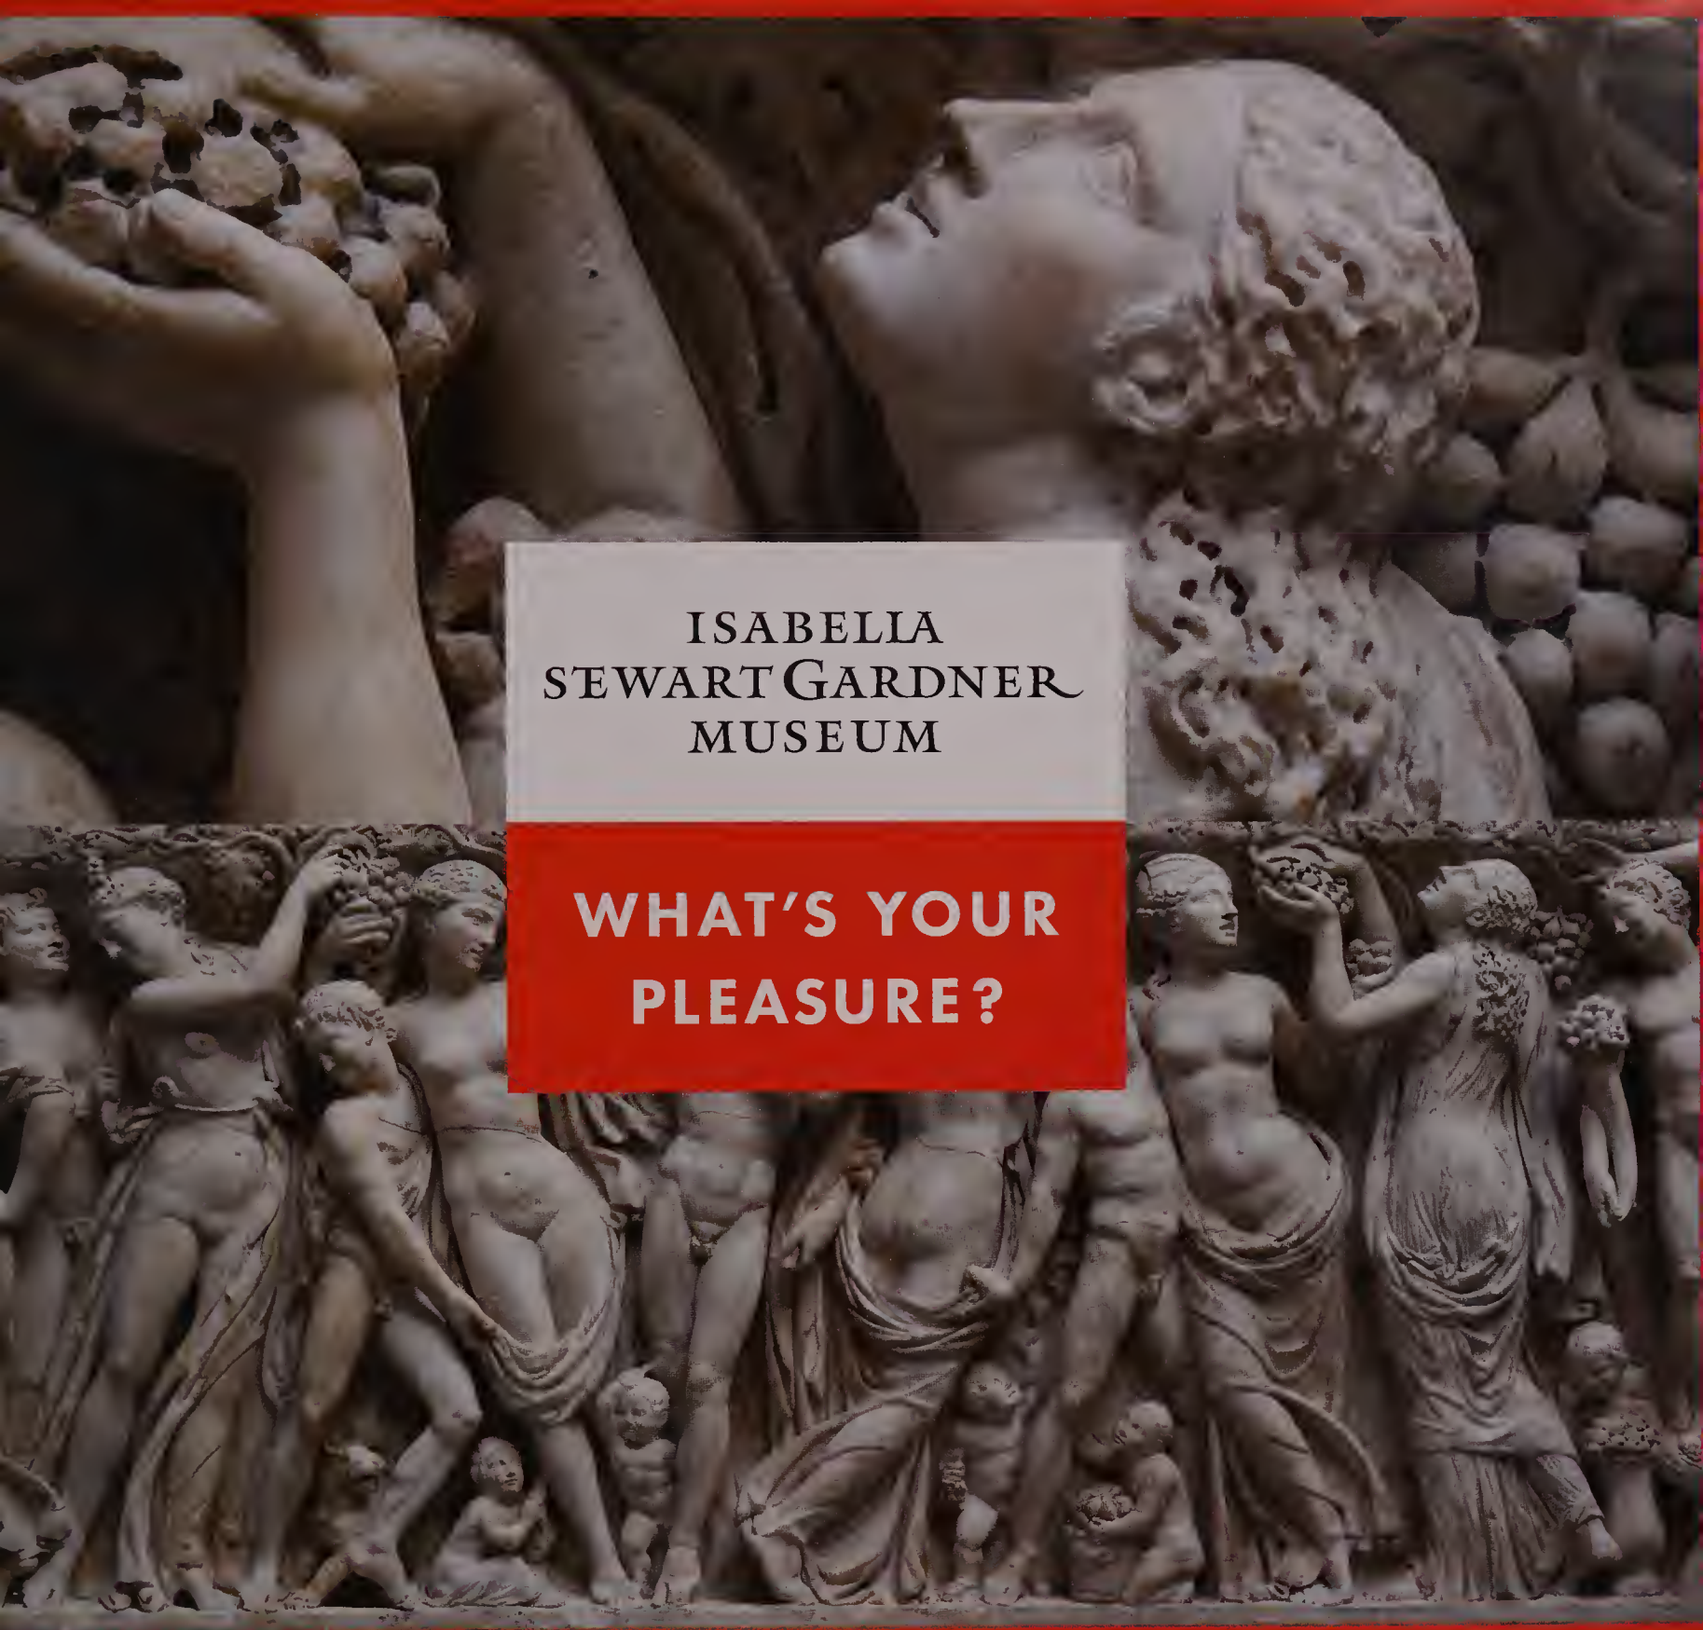
Kudos to Ivana for pushing the evening's fund-a-need to its goal by saying, "C'mon, I haven't had a drink all evening. You're the only thing standing between me and a glass of wine."

However, the party's best exchange was:

"I'm not that musical. I only play violin and piano."

"Well, at least those are instruments. I play my iPhone and the lottery."

SOUND AND VISION



Perkins School for the Blind officially deserves a place on the list of New England's top party schools, thanks to its annual Perkins Possibilities Gala.

Held on its Watertown campus, the event is a hoedown of epic proportions, beginning with a cocktail hour under a large white tent and continuing with dinner, dancing, a live auction and amazing performances. That's in no small part due to its high-octane co-chairs Corinne Grousbeck and Kevin Bright, who welcomed a crowd that included his wife, Claudia, and her kids, Campbell and Kelsey, with her other half, Matt Cosby, newlywed lovebirds Katherine Chapman Stemberg and Bill Schnorr, the incomparable RoAnn Costin, morning radio babe Kennedy Elsey, Perkins alum and Mercedes dealer Adam Roberge, funnyman Lenny Clarke with his brother and sister-in-law, Mike and Sharon, the stunning Simone Winston, golden couple Courtney and Michael Forrester, brunette bombshell Andrea Brooks, mega-philanthropists Sandy and Paul Edgerley, Hong Kong-bred Bond girl Evelyn Treacy, and one woman wearing a Chanel fanny pack, which elicited the following response: "Oh, for Christ's sake."

The evening's most amusing observation came from the woman who said, "It doesn't matter how fancy the party is. We always end up out in the parking lot, next to the dumpster." ◆

TACO THE TOWN

JULIE KING'S LONG-LASTING Mexican food memory is of cooking black salsa by her grandmother's side as a 5-year-old. Now, she serves that same recipe at her Villa Mexico Cafe in the Financial District—even picking up the nickname Lady Salsa by a few admirers along the way. I can't recall my first memory of Mexican food—I'm lucky enough to have never, ever eaten Taco Bell—but I'm fairly certain my next Mexican meal is going to come from one of the 21 restaurants across the city, including King's Villa Mexico Cafe, that we've featured in our cover story. The staff picked three items per themed day, planning a week that begins on Margarita Monday and ends on Sotol Sunday, with Torta Thursday among the topics sandwiched in between.

If cocktails aren't your thing, C. Dimiti tours some of the new or revamped local beer gardens that have popped up in the wake of Trillium's runaway success last year on the Greenway. And speaking of summer hotspots, fashion editor Lydia Santangelo heads to the Envoy Hotel, where she mixes bold florals with stripes for the season. Elsewhere in this Summer Dining issue, Sarah Hagman checks into Vermont's Lincoln Inn for a food-focused stay, Nicole Popma dishes on some sea-inspired serveware and Julia Aparicio spies the suds at Democracy Brewing, set to open in Downtown Crossing this month.

Pour a pint and relax while reading this issue. Summer's here.

ICA WATERSHED
256 Marginal St., Boston
icaboston.org/watershed

Millions of people have streamed through the Institute of Contemporary Art since its Seaport location opened in 2006, but the visitors—and the museum higher-ups—all seemed to want more art on view. When nothing was working out for more space in the neighborhood, ICA director Jill Medvedow looked across its front lawn—Boston Harbor—to East Boston.

"The way our architect created our current building, they did create the front of the building to look out over the harbor," says Kelly Gifford, the ICA's deputy director for public engagement and planning. "Jill actually got on a water taxi and went directly across the harbor—and that was the Boston Harbor Shipyard & Marina."

After working with the shipyard and the owners at Massport, the ICA reached an agreement to fix up a condemned warehouse for $10 million. The 15,000-square-foot spot, the Watershed, will be free to the public when it opens on July 4 with an exhibit from Diana Thater. The works explore the fragility of the natural world with videos and light installations that show scenes from the last white rhino with its protectors and another piece that makes visitors feel like they're swimming with dolphins.

"There's multiple galleries at the ICA, so you could love two artists but maybe not connect to another one," Gifford says. "But in the Watershed, we're giving the space over to one artist [each year], and Diana Thater's work is beautiful, immersive, stunning—and it's something we felt a really wide audience could relate to."

While ICA visitors can take a six-minute water taxi ride, running hourly on weekdays and every 30 minutes on weekends, the museum is also hoping to attract the East Boston community. It's partnering with three groups—East Boston Neighborhood Health Center, East Boston Social Center and Maverick Landing Community Services—to cultivate relationships, host staff and constituents, and see what the community wants out of its space. The ICA is making sure all signage at the Watershed is bilingual since, according to Gifford, the majority of their new neighbors speak Spanish as their primary language, and the space will also be flexible enough to host events and be a spot where visitors can relax with their families.

"It's a new model for us, and a really different museum than what you see here with white gallery walls and security guards. This place is supposed to be a really different feeling than your typical museum space," Gifford says. "You couldn't find two different neighborhoods. Seaport is highly privatized, and East Boston is filled with these incredible communities and neighborhoods that have been there for centuries."

That's a history that Gifford is also hoping Watershed visitors will be able to learn more about. The entrance to the space includes a small gallery devoted to the evolution of the shipyard, while an area after Thater's exhibition features a photo installation from the ICA's teen arts organization that includes shots from Piers Park and the rest of Eastie.

"You start with the history of the shipyard and you kind of end with this contemporary glimpse at where East Boston is today," Gifford says. "I don't think there's anything like this space in Boston. I can't think of another industrial, raw space in Boston that's free to the public that's going to house contemporary art." / Matt Martinelli

PINT-SIZED POWER: Democracy Brewing will have its five main beers available on tap.

A WORKER-OWNED BREWERY COMES TO DOWNTOWN CROSSING

Democracy Brewing
35 Temple Place, Boston
democracybrewing.com

THE IDEA BEHIND A FORTHCOMING Downtown Crossing brewery was born from more than simply beer. Democracy Brewing co-founders James Razsa and Jason Taggart kept community on their minds as they created the concept for their employee-owned beer hall and scratch kitchen that's slated to open in June.

"My background is community and labor organizing," Razsa says. "I got tired of focusing on problems and wanted to focus on solutions. For me, that meant a company that was actually worker-owned and could provide really good living wages."

Razsa and Taggart took inspiration from traditional German beer halls and Boston's history when designing the 156-seat interior filled with long communal tables, sweeping arches and a bar that stretches the length of one wall. Paintings and pictures of the Sons of Liberty and other 18th-century Massachusetts trailblazers decorate the 208-person space, which will also feature a "snug," a traditional private dining room from the U.K. that will accommodate eight to 10 guests and include a small door that opens directly to the bar. The brewery plans to host live music, movie nights and broadcast sports games on the big screen.

"A lot of people are doing the brewery thing now," Razsa says. "I think the difference is we're trying to combine that with the best of beer culture. We are going for a traditional German beer hall mixed with an almost-Victorian pub."

Helmed by chef Ben Waxler, the kitchen will serve elevated pub food for lunch and dinner every day. Starters include beer cheese nachos topped with chicken confit and apple salsa, while chorizo-stuffed chicken served with beer mustard spaetzle and creamed Swiss chard will be available as an entree. The menu will also feature pizza bagels, like the spicy Hawaiian made with walnut-poblano pesto, bacon, pineapple and gruyere, and burgers such as the B-B-B Beerger topped with beer battered pickles, beer aioli, bacon and cheddar. For dessert, prepare yourself for a deep-fried fluffernutter served with jelly ice cream. The brewery will carry five main draft brews—spanning from a light-bodied Workers Pint to a 1919 Strike Stout—along with five rotating seasonal options, and the menu also points out beer recommendations to accompany many of the food items.

"I want folks to know that they can come in here and get the best—in my very biased opinion—food in Boston and the most amazing beer to pair with it," Razsa says. "But they're also helping to make sure that 48 folks can get a living wage of $15 an hour."

IT'S POPPIN': The Pad Thai popcorn is available in June.

Good Eats: Thai'd Up

As if popcorn needed to be any more craveable, Ken Oringer gives the snack the street food treatment for the latest installment of the ongoing Chef Popcorn Menu at ShowPlace ICON. The chef/co-owner of Little Donkey, Toro, Coppa and Uni describes his pad Thai popcorn with roasted peanuts, available now through the end of the month, as "spicy, sweet, citrusy, buttery, with [some] crunch." Preorder a basket with the Seaport theater's mobile app, and it'll be prepared as your tickets are scanned. With a little self-control, you might have something left to munch on once the movie trailers end. / Nathan Tavares

Drink of the Moment
SALÉ ROVERS

PRICE: $16

INGREDIENTS: Bols Barrel-Aged Genever, Carpano Antica, Luxardo Maraschino, toasted almond-infused Dolin Dry

BACKGROUND: Dutch distiller Lucas Bols uses an 1820 recipe for this malt spirit, considered the OG gin before Londoners got their hands on it. "Depending on how you work with it, it can be more gin-forward or whiskey-forward," says Explorateur bartender Ian Swindlehurst, who steeps torched almonds in a sweet vermouth for this Manhattan-slash-martini variation, named after a band of privateers and a notorious Netherlands native who commandeered a Moroccan island—and whose descendants can be traced to Jackie Kennedy.

GIN CITY: Bar manager Gina Goyette rolled out a gin-centric section for the spring menu, which features another "gin converter", the PGP ($13). The color of this fizz with a housemade lime sugar led to the abbreviated name, which is inspired by Dr. Seuss' "Pale Green Pants."

ORANGE YOU GLAD: "You're definitely not going to recognize most of the labels on our wine list, but that's for a reason," says Goyette, who enjoys finding small producers for by-the-glass pours (ask her about her sparkling options sometime) like Caliptra's trebbiano ($15). "I call this a gateway orange," Goyette says, adding that the light nut notes would pair with braised lamb shank and roasted chicken, dishes that also would play well with the Salé Rovers.

A NEW CHAPTER: The nine-month-old restaurant and cafe recently debuted its dimly lit Library Room, which has hosted special Tiki and sparkling cocktail menus. "We are still kind of figuring out what the library wants to be," Goyette says. "I know the two of us really want to have a cool, swanky lounge on Friday and Saturday nights." Studious cocktail lovers are invited for a more intimate experience with nine of "the most comfortable bar stools you've ever sat on in your life" where Goyette, Swindlehurst and the rest of the team cook up "things that are a little more exotic." / Saroh Hagmon

TAKING A SPIN

With more than 70 films and decades of experience under his belt, John Cusack is no stranger to the silver screen. Now the actor is giving fans a peek into the making of cult classic High Fidelity, with an audience discussion after a screening of the dramedy at the Boch Wang Theatre on June 23. We caught up with Cusack for a quick chat ahead of his Boston appearance. / Cothryn Hoight

WHEN DID YOU FIRST KNOW YOU WANTED TO BE AN ACTOR? When I was pretty young. I loved going to the old art house movies and seeing theater.

WHAT IS THE MOST DIFFICULT ACTING ROLE YOU EVER PLAYED? Brian Wilson in Love and Mercy. That was difficult because he and his wife are alive and it was a very tricky time in his life, so I was very concerned with getting it right for them.

WHAT ADVICE DO YOU HAVE FOR ASPIRING ACTORS? Go do a play. It's like if you want to be a basketball player you can't just talk about basketball, you have to actually practice and dribble and shoot and make lots of shots. The best way to learn about acting is to do it.

WHERE DO YOU SEE THE FUTURE OF FILM GOING? I don't really know. It seems like the movies that I used to make are now ending up more in the TV space. Maybe it will be like vinyl and it will make a comeback to how it used to be, which is a little less homogenized, but we'll see.

WICKED PROUD

With a theme of Rainbow Resistance, this year's Boston Pride festivities harken back to the roots of the modern LGBTQ movement—the Stonewall riots in 1969—as a catalyst for political and social change.

Revelry will be put on hold at the start of the June 9 parade for the Transgender Remembrance section memorializing those lost to transphobic violence in 2018—11 reported killings nationwide as of late May. "This theme is a call for every segment of our community to unite in the resistance against the oppression and backward policies of the current administration in Washington, D.C., the systemic threats to communities of color and trans people in our country and the potential repeal of trans equality legislation in Massachusetts," says Boston Pride president Sylvain Bruni. ASK THE EXPERTS
BOOZE JUST LIKE A LADY

After more than 35 years slinging cocktails at spots like Drink, Brick & Mortar and Toro, Misty Kalkofen and Kirsten Amann distilled their knowledge into Drinking Like Ladies: 75 recipes with short histories of female trailblazers like Filipino-American activist Florence Finch. When it comes to their own guidelines for guzzling, the pair gives it to us straight—along with a recipe for a Finch-inspired bourbon-sake drink that can be found on improper.com—before the book hits shelves on June 19. / Sarah Hagman

CLAIM YOUR SPACE: Until the Roaring '20s, the publick house, saloon and barroom were distinctly male preserves to meet, talk, work or relax and answer only to other men. We have lots of lost time to make up for, ladies, so hook your heel to the brass rail with confidence.

DRINK CULTURALLY: While traveling, drink what the locals drink: rosé in a small cup in the south of France, kalimotxo in Spain, baijiu in China. Let your bartender be your tour guide and note that consuming a cocktail in its natural habitat is one of life's great pleasures.

DRINKS ARE NOT GENDERED: Every lady is unique, and so is her palate. There is no such thing as a girly drink. Drink what you want, whether it's sweet, pink and fruity or down, brown and bold.

SHOW YOUR APPRECIATION: The bartenders and servers who make their jobs appear effortless are the hardest workers in the biz. They depend on gratuities for the bulk of their pay. Twenty percent of your bill is a great standard, with 25 percent or more showing sincere appreciation for exceptional service. And always remember: Cash is king.

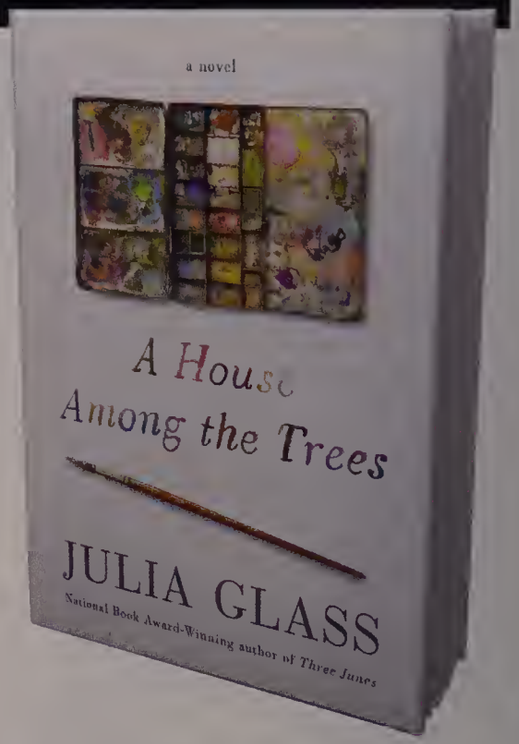
CHILD'S PLAY



A LOCAL NOVELIST ILLUSTRATES THE WORLD AROUND A FAMOUS WRITER

A House Among the Trees* by Julia Glass
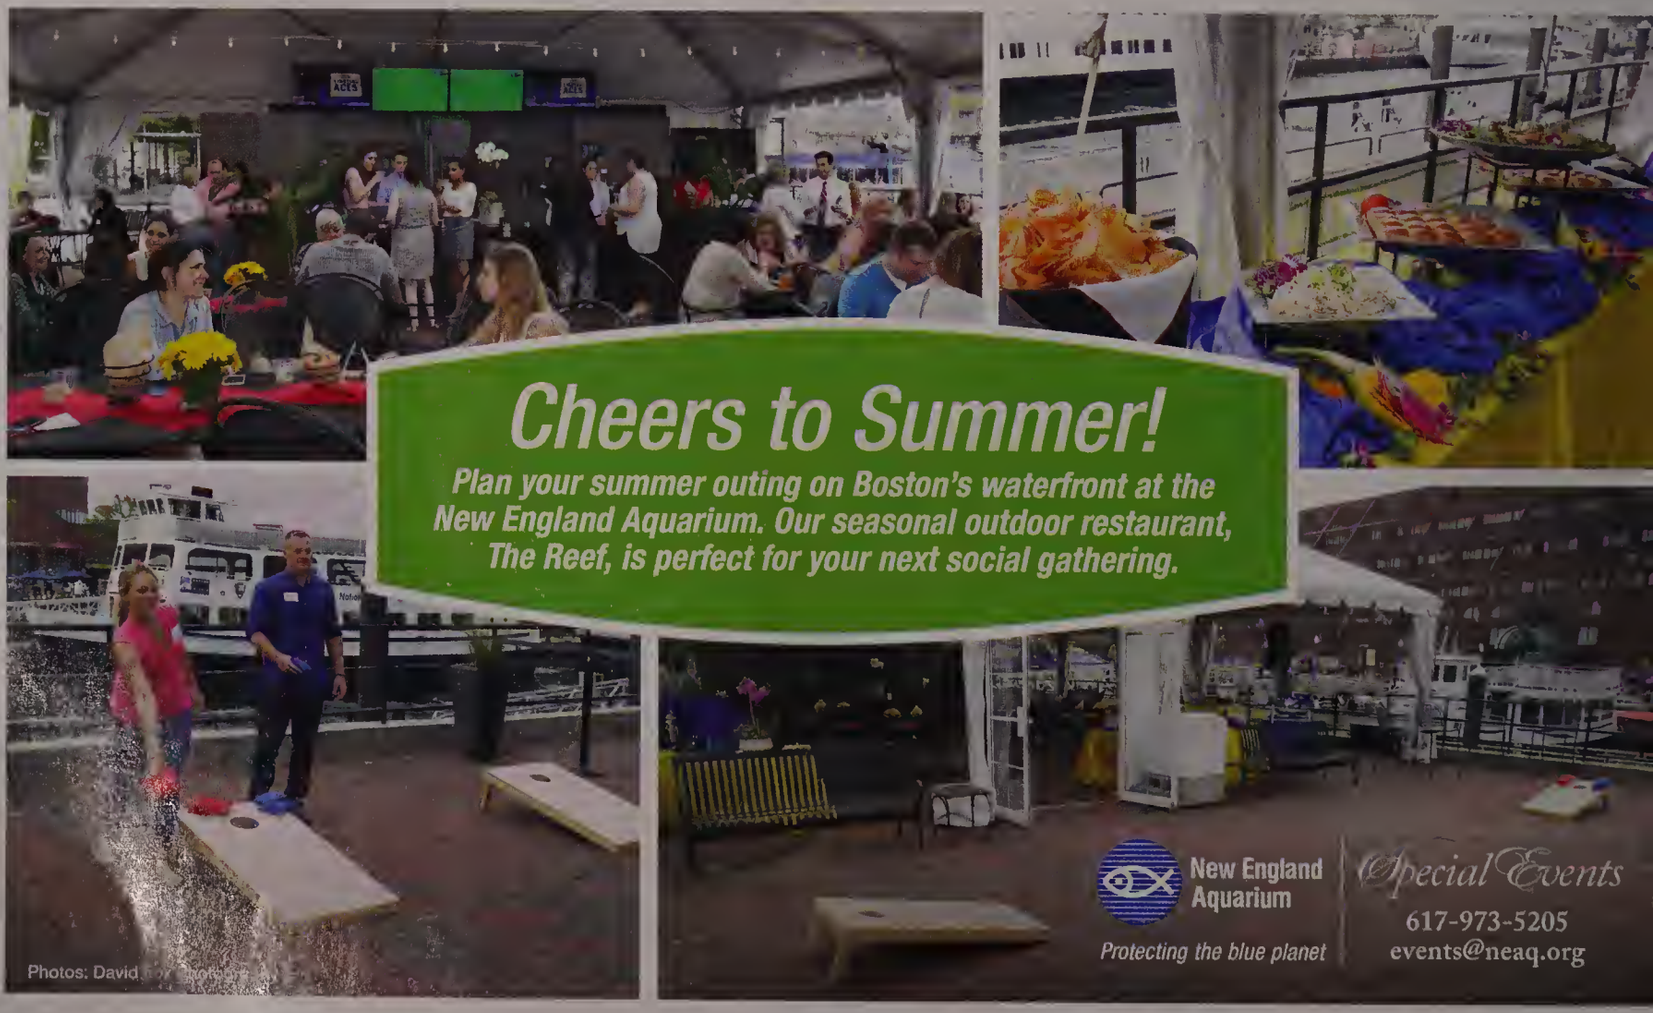
Published by Anchor Books, 368 pages, $17



MORT LEAR, A FANTASTICALLY successful but neurotic children's book author and artist—somewhat resembling Maurice Sendak—is dead at the start of this sixth novel from Marblehead resident Julia Glass. So we only know the protagonist in A House Among the Trees retrospectively, through memories from the people in his life. That includes Tommy Daulair, a woman who was his steady assistant for 40 years. That friendship was balanced—or unbalanced—by Merry Galarza, a museum curator who fully expected Mort to leave his colossal archives to her Contemporary Book Museum.

The book recalls decades of Mort's life in which his pen sparkled despite personal grief. He accepted awards, gave readings and remained prolifically productive, filling bookstore windows. The dazzling Oscar winner Nick Greene lands the role of Mort in a biopic, and the British actor plunges into the rather surreal quest of getting to know his now ghostly cinematic character. He finds some sad synchronicities in their two histories, exploring abuse Mort suffered before obtaining success.

Glass renders Nick's English charm deliciously, describing the joys and horrors of celebrity and romance, while other colorful characters include the wild Deirdre, whose jazzy dialogue would play well on stage. Mort inspires many complex relationships, revelations and unexpected outcomes, but Glass also brings sophisticated liveliness to her characters, even as her deceased protagonist jiggles their lives.

FROM PAGE 273: "She realizes she's peering at him, as if he is not in focus.
'Nicholas Greene,' he says.
'Oh ... oh Christ—oh sorry*—I mean, of course you are. God, I'm an idiot.' And then the picture does come into focus. 'You're playing Mort. In the movie. Oh my God.'*
'Yes,' he says. 'And you're not ... some skulduggerish gal reporter, chasing me into the woods, Diana the Media Huntress.'
'No,' says Merry. 'I don't think so, at least.'" ◆

DINE AND CRASH

FOLLOW YOUR GUT TO A MICHELIN-STAR-TRAINED CHEF'S "RESTAURANT WITH ROOMS"

IF YOU THINK YOUR JOURNEY UP A CONGESTED I-93 was a lengthy commute, talk to the hamachi and wagyu beef about an overnight flight from Japan to Woodstock, Vermont, home of the Lincoln Inn & Restaurant. Thankfully, once you pull into the 1875 farmhouse's six green acres for prompt 7 o'clock drinks in the tavern, the rest of the work is left up to chef Jevgenija Saromova, a one-woman show in a kitchen pushing out wildly imaginative four-, seven- or 12-course tasting menus (beginning at $65) with European flair.

The Latvian native traded in her professional swimsuit for chef's whites, training at Cordon Bleu and working her way through Michelin-star restaurants in Italy, France and England, including Yorke Arms and Grassington House, where after indulging in lavish meals and guilt-free drinks, guests retire to rooms for full-bellied slumbers. Saromova and proprietor Mara Mehlman brought that concept to the idyllic New England town three-and-a-half years ago, inviting the inn's guests and the public to join once-a-night seatings that begin with a half-hour to decompress with a drink in hand. While milling about the library lined with a chess set, board games and books like Wine for Dummies and Reader's Digest Illustrated Guide to Gardening, choose a bottle of wine that can breathe a little before the party moves to the dining room. There, you'll find a menu that Mehlman typed up just that morning, based on Saromova's ever-changing creations. She first visualizes how she wants each dish to look, sketching on a yellow legal pad, and then fills in the ingredients after her daily delivery arrives. And, yes, that includes on-demand, far-flung fish, meat and produce. Hopefully you remembered to bring your appetite to this long-standing inn.

The building's many past lives include serving as a one-time home to President Lincoln's cousin, a boarding house and a handful of restaurant iterations, as well as a short stint as what more than a few returning visitors have described as a "hippie bar"—most likely the era when a hand-painted Howard Johnson's sign mysteriously made its way into the attic. Downstairs, guests can request a spot in the private dining room named for the late actor/salsa slinger Paul Newman. To accommodate the privacy-relishing frequenter, a previous owner transformed an outdoor porch into a tucked-away spot for his family of eight, and today you can still spot a working doorbell and porch light.

Otherwise, you'll likely find yourself in the main room with up to two dozen fellow diners. Other than a friendly reminder that her timer has gone off—if she's busy chatting with guests—Saromova has no assistance in the kitchen. If you make a reservation on New Year's Eve, when a musician sits down at a piano inherited from Mehlman's mother, Saromova's still toiling away solo in the kitchen for an even larger crowd of 45.

But on to the food: For a first course, wafts of buttery poached lobster may reach your nose as a plate with onion ash—made from a thinly sliced vegetable that's then pulverized—lightly dusted in one corner of the dish appears in front of you. Another sensory blast hits when a glass dome filled with apple smoke is lifted to reveal hamachi plated on radish with a Granny Smith puree and wedges of citrus. The next course includes a seared scallop topped with salmon roe and shaved dehydrated egg yolk, with a trail of saffron aioli leading to yuzu panna cotta atop a black rice crisp. A later taste of farmed pigeon from North Carolina might make plant-based eaters reconsider their diet, but leave room for dessert because the freezer here, Saromova says, is not for meat or fish, but for sorbet and ice cream. And, oh, is there sorbet! It's served plunked next to an edible 24-carat-gold-topped dark chocolate delice. But, if you're lucky, there's an earlier course with one carrot that's not to be missed, a product of a 92-hour process that involves a water bath, dehydration, soaking, sous vide and Saromova shuffling between the private residence and the restaurant's kitchen before it's wrapped in an orange peel.

If you want to completely leave behind decision making for the entire evening, opt for the wine pairings that offer a tour of everywhere from Oregon to France, Slovenia and even Vermont. (And why not, when instead of packing up and getting back in your car, you have the option of sauntering upstairs to one of six modest bedrooms?) A pour from the Willamette Valley bypasses the well-known pinot noirs for a chardonnay, while Mehlman announces that a taste of this trousseau is not anything you'd expect from a red wine. But then again, you quickly learn to shed expectations at the Lincoln Inn.

The next morning, Saromova is back in the kitchen to cook complimentary breakfast, complete with homemade jam, which you can also buy to enjoy at home. And beginning this month, guests can even stick around for lunch if the sun is shining, as Saromova breaks in her tonir, an Armenian barbecue she built after a trip home inspired a bout of good old-fashioned sibling rivalry. Determined to build a better one than her sister had, she collected stones from the property's bordering Ottauquechee River during a two-week period to reconstruct a 2,000-year-old tradition that would mean avoiding having to serve run-of-the-mill salads and sandwiches. After a day spent grazing, the only thing left to fuel up will be your gas tank for the trip home. Or, you could see if there's a dinner table and room available for another night. ◆

BEAUTIFUL BABY

TALULLA SERVES UP PRETTY, PRICEY FARE IN A TONY CORNER OF CAMBRIDGE

I'VE BEEN TALKING UP TALULLA, A NEW restaurant in Cambridge's Huron Village, and even my Boston-lifer friends ask, "Where's that?" To get there, you head a mile outside Harvard Square toward Fresh Pond, past a series of multimillion-dollar stately homes. (I don't know anyone who lives there, either.) It's worth enduring real estate envy to get to this tiny spot, which wraps refined French technique around careful local sourcing and globe-trotting flavors. Given its swank surroundings, don't be surprised to learn it ain't exactly a budget bistro.

The 28-seat room has an understated charm with exposed brick and vanilla walls, copious fresh flowers and photos of the restaurant's namesake, the toddler of wine director/co-owner Danielle Ayer and husband/chef/co-owner Conor Dennehy—who's supported by sous-chef Joy Gerardi and veteran cocktail maven Matt Schrage. The short menu of traditional appetizers, entrees and desserts can be bundled into a $60 three-course prix fixe (wine pairings, $35); a separate seven-course tasting menu runs $115 (wine pairings, $75), with a couple of uplift options for both.

The wine list demands a little study, breaching 100 bottles and leaning heavily on France, with stops across the Old World and the U.S. It's a list that doesn't blink at a $575 Alsatian riesling with some bottle age, or a younger white burgundy at $450, but also includes some brash young French upstart's rather modest, funky pét-nat rosé as a tasting pairing. Most bottles go for less than $70, and a dozen by-the-glass options run $10-$21. It's a wine-lover's restaurant, though Schrage adds a few beers ($5-$8), a good selection of aperitif wines and bracing original highballs ($12) like the Sylvan Spectacle of fino sherry, the quinine-accented Italian dry vermouth Cocchi Americano, a sprig of rosemary and fresh lemon.

Dennehy's menu is loaded with exquisite details and picture-pretty platings, but his is not a doggy-bag aesthetic. He sets the table with fabulous house-made sourdough and pale-green ramp butter dotted with tiny onion blossoms, plus a wee amuse-bouche of diced salt-roasted potato with a dab of mayo and sliver of sorrel, hinting at nearby posh summer cookouts. His apps will soon populate many an Instagram feed, like scallops ($18) barely cured and given umami smack and brine from kombu leaves, delicately arrayed on the edge of a plate over sea-green avocado puree, microtome-thin radish slices and strips of dehydrated rhubarb. A similarly lovely slash of textures and colors makes up radishes ($16) generously bedecked with Maine crabmeat and cucumber slices over buttermilk/chive dressing. Ajo blanco ($17) is a pale puddle of cool, silky, garlicky goodness pocked with pink Muscat grapes, bright green parsley and tawny almonds. But even monochromatic dishes like a green salad ($15) of arugula and pea greens with judiciously applied miso vinaigrette packs lively flavors.

Entrees also favor gorgeous, tweezery platings. Both the Berkshire pork ($34), with its hunks of roasted loin and crisp belly flanked by grain salad and a sprightly lovage salsa verde, and the lamb loin ($38), with its wee slices artfully splayed across blobs of potato puree and dotted with ramps and garlic scapes over a rich pan sauce, are lovely and delectable, but also small enough to be the object of dad jokes. Cavatelli ($32) under a rich, coarse braise of lamb with tatsoi, spring onions and toasted bread crumbs is duller to look at but more substantial, ditto the novel "risotto" ($30) of coarsely cut toasted oats, vivid green peas, Macomber turnips and a big, soft-poached duck egg, though the porridge could use more salt. Black bass ($34) will also draw out camera phones, a meaty skin-on fillet with a couple of shelled mussels and edible flowers over a bed of flageolets in a superb, deep-flavored miso broth.

The comparatively simple desserts show off great ingredients, like a huckleberry currant cobbler ($14) in a cast-iron skillet strewn with crunchy maple/oat streusel and fennel fronds alongside quality hazelnut ice cream. Three cheeses ($15) from small American farms are properly tempered and ably complemented with crisp flatbread, strawberry-rhubarb compote, raisins on the vine and pickled hazelnuts. Sixty bucks for this kind of dinner isn't exactly cheap, but still feels like a value.

The tasting menu, by contrast, is more of a special-occasion extravaganza, and with wine pairings you might be staggering stuporously across the finish line from the richness, dazzling variety and picturesqueness of it all (the portion sizes are actually sensibly scaled). The short space here won't allow a blow-by-blow, but from the amuse (chilled parsnip soup dusted with cocoa nibs) through seven courses to a hunk of genoise over a dab of dreamy lemon curd, it's a leisurely parade of luxurious moments, with unexpected, witty wine pairings. OK, two highlights: artfully cut local squid bodies and tentacles crowned with green garlic over nutty farrow and dots of bitter-lemon conserva, served with an unusual, bracingly dry Hungarian Tòkaji; and lamb belly (and especially lamb rillettes) in a little nest of black garlic, nori and fennel, paired with soft, mostly-grenache Rhone with a lovely tannic bite at the end.

In short, Talulla is the kind of neighborhood restaurant that one finds only in really prosperous neighborhoods. We ordinary folk can visit as long as we're willing to shell out a little extra for its considerable charisma and skill (and those wines), and maybe for big celebrations to spend large on that over-the-top tasting menu, too. ◆

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR SUNSCREEN?

A: Thank you for asking such an important question. I founded SkinHealth in 1999 as a result of my sister dying of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40. My goal is to help prevent melanoma deaths by providing the best sun protection possible.

At SkinHealth we offer seven different sunscreens so there is something for everybody. All of our sunscreens are broad spectrum and have a high SPF. Most of them are mineral-based for superior protection and contain between 5% to 17% micronized zinc oxide, which deflects damaging UVA rays. Our sunscreens are invisible on the skin, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy. Our sunscreen has been selected by Health Magazine as the best in the country.

Please stay safe this summer and consider using SkinHealth sunscreens!

TIMELESS WONDER

STANLEY KUBRICK'S SCI-FI STUNNER TURNS 50, CELEBRATED IN GLORIOUS 70MM

THE BEST MOVIE HITTING SCREENS right now is 50 years old—but the 70mm "unrestored version" of Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey that's unspooling at the Somerville Theatre for the first two weeks of June (before moving to the Coolidge Corner Theatre on June 15 for an additional 10 days) shouldn't look any older than it did when it premiered in 1968.

Credit for this achievement largely falls on filmmaker Christopher Nolan. The director of the Dark Knight trilogy is a powerful proponent of the 70mm film format, which sat dormant for decades until he—along with fellow cinephiles Paul Thomas Anderson and Quentin Tarantino—revived the costly analog process. Nolan captured portions of 2014's Interstellar and the majority of last year's Dunkirk on the large-gauge celluloid frames, which contain far more fine-grain detail than even the best digital projection. It would take a digital resolution of nearly 18K to even come close to 70mm film, and yet 4K TV technology is currently billed as the most cutting-edge picture quality.

In fact, Nolan was busy preparing digital remasters of his film library for home release on the trendy Ultra High Definition format last fall when Ned Price, vice president of restoration at Warner Bros., was working on a UHD transfer of 2001 in the same lab. Price showed Nolan interpositive copies that had been made from the original negatives in '99 as part of a preservation project that was never intended to become public. But Nolan was a fan of Kubrick's meditative masterpiece ever since seeing it at the impressionable age of 7, when his father took him to see a 70mm print in London.

Perhaps—like me—he was mesmerized by the incredibly realistic representations of commercial spacecrafts, orbiting space stations, lunar surfaces and low-gravity interiors set to the silence of space and the soundtrack's classical music.

Common complaints in subsequent years include that the film is boring and Kubrick's musical choices are pretentious—from Richard Strauss' Also Sprach Zarathustra, the now-iconic tone poem that opens and closes the film's cosmic visions, to Johann Strauss' The Blue Danube, the unexpected but absolutely perfect waltz that bridges the extended "Dawn of Man" sequence leading to Kubrick's transition into outer space. But most of those comments have likely originated from viewers who've never experienced the movie presented on film.

The director of the Dark Knight trilogy is a powerful proponent of the 70mm film format.

It's become a cliche to claim that you haven't really seen a movie unless you've watched it on the big screen—an assertion that typically emanates from a marketer's toolbox. But every so often, these claims reflect truth. Certainly, 1962's Lawrence of Arabia retains its narrative thrust even when viewed on a television screen, graced as it is by Peter O'Toole's star-making turn as English officer T.E. Lawrence. But the epic sweep and grandeur of David Lean's 70mm production is lost. Take the iconic shot of a distant speck that gradually takes the form of Omar Sharif as he emerges from the rippling heatwaves of a never-ending desert. On a small screen, the Egyptian actor remains tragically tiny.

To see 2001 in anything less than 70mm is even more tragic. Kubrick casts a spell that relies on the complete immersion he creates, deliberately pulling you into his film's hyperreality. And in Kubrick's hands, everything is deliberate. Each obsessive layer of detail has been designed to be seen on the biggest screen possible, where the deep focus of Kubrick and cinematographer Geoffrey Unsworth's meticulously composed frames acts as a window into unshakeable sights and guides us from the beginnings of humanity toward the first steps of its evolution. But even with all of that transformation at play—organic and man-made—Kubrick never shies away from the deliberate acts of death-dealing that propel the development of a species, focusing on the earliest of man's destructive weapons to his most technologically advanced.

Nowhere is this more explicit than in his famous match-cut between a bone that's been used as an instrument of murder, hurled toward the heavens, until it's replaced by an orbiting nuclear satellite, ready to rain death from Earth's atmosphere. And that's before even mentioning the HAL 9000, an artificially intelligent computer system that's increasingly bizarre behavior leads to a showdown of man and machine on the film's journey toward Jupiter, and the mysterious visions we're left to interpret at voyage's end.

One thing forbidden from interpretation is the analog film itself. At no point did Nolan indulge in an urge to "correct" the original image or sound in Kubrick's masterpiece. Eschewing digital tools, he and his team have left any slight scratches or tears intact, along with the six-channel soundtrack that remains an embedded element. Thus, the "unrestoration," an analog wonder and its tiny imperfections that should look just as new as the day they were first projected. ◆

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY ★★★★
Starring Keir Dullea, Gary Lockwood, William Sylvester, Robert Beatty, Leonard Rossiter, Sean Sullivan and Douglas Rain. Written by Stanley Kubrick and Arthur C. Clarke, based on Clarke's short story, The Sentinel. Directed by Kubrick. Special 70mm engagements play at the Somerville Theatre through June 14, followed by the Coolidge Corner Theatre on June 15-24. Actor Keir Dullea will appear at the Coolidge for a post-screening Q&A after the 7 pm show on June 23.

THE MAVERICKS

Music / Paul Robicheau

ECLECTIC SPINS

THE MAVERICKS BUCK MUSICAL MOLDS FOR A MIX OF GENRES FROM CUBAN TO COUNTRY

RAUL MALO RECALLS THE FIRST TIME that his group the Mavericks played Indian Ranch in Webster. "We had no idea what to expect, like 'OK, it's a campground-looking place with a beautiful lake,'" he says. "We didn't know what was coming. ... When people go to shows there, they're ready to throw down and have some fun."

Sounds just like the Mavericks—perhaps the perfect band for a rustic amphitheater that's outgrown its image of catering strictly to country music. "We've branched beyond that too," says Malo, 52, whose Miami-born, Nashville-based outfit opens the Indian Ranch season on June 16, for what has become a favorite annual stop.

The Mavericks' eclecticism combines country twang, Cuban groove, Tex-Mex bounce and Malo's rich-voiced balladry. "It's hurt in terms of full-on commercial success, even though by all accounts, we are successful," says the singer/guitarist, whose Grammy-winning group also plays the Martha's Vineyard Performing Arts Center on July 18. "You can forge ahead with sheer bravado and stupidity like we have and break through, but it definitely makes it more challenging if you don't fit into a neat little box. I don't think it matters as much as a few years ago. ... We've been able to solidify our fan base by relentless touring."

Formed in 1989 as what Malo describes as a "hybrid rockabilly country alt-punk thing," the

"You can forge ahead with sheer bravado and stupidity like we have and break through."

Mavericks have kept busy since returning from an eight-year hiatus with a 2012 release. Now anchored by co-founders Malo and drummer Paul Deakin, keyboardist Jerry Dale McFadden and guitarist Eddie Perez (with guest live players on bass, accordion and horns), the group has since released three albums—half as many as the Mavericks made between 1990 and 2003, when they crafted hits such as "What a Crying Shame" and "Here Comes the Rain."

"You have to make a choice as an artist," Malo says of putting out 2017's Brand New Day on the band's own label, Mono Mundo, which translates to One World. "What games do you want to play or do you make your own game and let people come to you and exist outside the mold or confines of the business?"

Brand New Day rolls from the Roy Orbison-esque orchestration of the optimistic title track to the jaunty, sax-infused "Easy as It Seems," which suggests a '60s TV theme song, couching jabs like "Building walls between us doesn't fix a thing."

That lyric makes sense in light of the Mavericks' trip to Cuba last year, televised as Great Performances: Havana Time Machine on PBS. "To go out there as a performer and see the island in that way was earth-shattering for me," says Malo, the son of Cuban immigrants. After meeting Havana rockers Sweet Lizzy Project on that trip, he sponsored their immigration to the U.S. and signed them to Mono Mundo. "I couldn't stand to see more great musicians languishing away on an island that's disconnected from the rest of the world," he says. "We can really start to bridge that gap and maybe one day have a normal relationship with Cuba again. I know I'm a dreamer and idealist, but I'd rather do that than sit around and do nothing."

Malo grew up with Cuban music in his parents' home, where his father listened to country musicians like Johnny Cash and Buck Owens and his mother also loved opera. The singer says that his mother recalled how he'd bang on the lid of the family's console record player as a child to request Frank Sinatra and that his life truly changed when he heard Elvis Presley's "It's Now or Never."

"When my mom showed me that it was an old Italian melody or aria, that sort of made the connection, the thread that I needed to find that connects all kinds of music," Malo says. "If the king of rock 'n' roll can do an opera song, hell, you can do anything."

His omnivorous musical appetite didn't help the fledging Mavericks secure their focus. "I've gone with the wind and gone with the muse," Malo says. "It's safe to say we know what we're doing now, but early on we were just flying by the seat of our pants." ◆

FAMILY JUULS

GETTING ALL CHARGED UP ON THE LATEST TREND

I'M DRIVING IN THE CAR WITH MY MOTHER when she asks if I want a piece of gum. I say sure before I realize that she's chewing nicotine gum. "You know that stuff's supposed to help you quit smoking, not get you started, right?" I ask. She replies that it's great gum and repeats the offer. A longtime smoker who's periodically trying to quit, she has a carton of gum that is roughly the dimensions of a family-sized box of Cap'n Crunch, so she's got plenty to spare. If you think she sounds like a candidate for vaping, I agree. I decide it's time to visit the intersection of pop culture and nicotine addiction, by which I mean the Juul.

If you haven't heard of Juuling, well, then I guess you don't know any teenagers. Juuls—slender vape pens that charge from a USB—are the scourge of schools everywhere. My niece, who is a freshman in high school, says that, like, oh my god, soooooooo many people are Juuling, it's, like, crazy. And yes, teenage girls still talk exactly like they're about to record the intro to "Baby Got Back." "Oh my god, Becky, look at her Juul."

To procure a Juul, I drive to my local vape emporium. Then I drive another few blocks, to make sure nobody sees my car parked at the local vape emporium.

Inside, the display case looks like a head shop from a near-future dystopia where bongs are replaced with electric pod-juice machines, most of which evoke the sexy aesthetic of discarded medical equipment from the biohazard dumpster behind the hospice center. I sheepishly ask the guy at the counter to point me toward the Juuls. He flashes a tight smile and tells me they don't have any, but the gas station down the street does. As sheepish as I was to enter the vape store, I'm now slightly more embarrassed that the item I desire isn't classy enough to be sold at a vape store.

At the gas station, I ask the cashier which flavor pods I should get with my Juul. I don't really care, but for some reason I want her to know that I'm not a vape fiend. "Well, people seem to like the mango," she says. "We can't keep those in stock." She's ringing up my mango vape juice when I notice that the Juul itself comes with four starter pods, so the cashier voids the mango transaction while the people behind me stare impatiently, wondering when this degenerate will get out of the way so they can buy their scratch tickets and Monster Energy drink.

I take the Juul home to charge it before bringing it over to mom's. I'd read that some teachers are banning USB drives because they can't tell whether kids are saving homework or charging their nicotine wands. But the USB charger connects to the Juul at a right angle, so that when it's plugged in the thing sticks straight up. This looks like a flash drive in the same way that a piece of Muenster looks like an iPhone. Bcsides, who uses flash drives? Like, what am I, a spy from 2003? Oh my god, Becky.

My mother doesn't use flash drives. But she does dress completely in L.L. Bean, because apparently they're the last company that will let you shop from the catalog over your landline phone. She wakes up to a clock radio. If she needs to send you a document, she'll fax you from the nearest Mail Boxes Etc. So I'm not real confident she'll embrace the Juul, even though it is theoretically safer than smoking. But when I open the box, she says, "Oh, I've already got one of those things," and fetches an elaborate device of the sort I saw in the vape store. "I don't use it, though," she says. "I think I lost the charger."

This looks like a flash drive in the same way that a piece of Muenster looks like an iPhone.

Maybe she'll fare better with the Juul, which is simple enough that even a ... smoker 18 years of age or older could use it. I tap it on the coffee table to activate the charge status light, which glows a happy green, and I jam a crème brulee pod in the end. I expect the tip to start smoldering or emitting a wisp of fragrance, but: nothing. The stick just sits there, inert, until I pick it up and take a drag. Then my lungs fill with sickly sweet mist and I cough my brains out before handing the thing over to my mom, who smoothly takes a small hit and exhales a calm cloud. "It tastes pretty good," she says, but she doesn't seem impressed.

I take another hit. It's like putting my head inside a cake. I feel slightly lightheaded, then mildly nauseous. Wow, what fun! This is definitely worth forming an expensive and debilitating addiction over—NOT. That's my rad anti-Juul PSA, kids.

But really, I don't get why you'd ever start doing this. Think of all the other things you could be spending money on, like Fortnite skins or a new iPhone screen to replace the other new iPhone screen that you just broke. Even my mom was unimpressed. She went right back to nicotine gum. You never lose the charger for that. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON MARIJUANA, DATING AND BEAUTY EXPENSES

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

OK, so I know it's going to be legal in July, but right now I'm having my own issues with pot. Have you noticed lately that everywhere you walk it's in the air? My apartment building has nine stories, and every time the elevator doors open, it wafts in. The hall on my floor, the lobby—everywhere it seems—stinks of marijuana. I say live and let live, but is this going to be the new norm? Talk about air pollution! Well, you're asking someone who grew up in an era when virtually everyone smoked cigarettes. My least favorite chore was cleaning up after a dinner party. There would be almost a dozen large ashtrays, full of butts, which I'd dump out, then wash and dry the trays. When my wife and I were newlyweds, and our friends were marrying as well, our usual wedding present to them was a crystal ashtray from Shreve, Crump & Low, moderately expensive. You could never have enough ashtrays.

Before that, when I was living at home after college, I would go out on dates and often come home late. I would dread driving up my parents' driveway because in the front window I would see the shining symbol of the watch-woman: My mother's cigarette lighting up the window of my room. Mom was waiting up to call me a "drunken sot."

So now it seems like you're going to be conscious of pot smoke and smells in many places. But there will be endless choices for places to live and certainly endless places that will not reek of pot smell. Do a little research. And move if it bothers you that much.

I realize that Big Brother is watching us closely—all over the place—but you're still free to "move around the country."

I'm a woman in my late 20s who is really into the dating game. But a friend recently reminded me of the story of the princess and the frog, and how she had to kiss the frog that then turned into a prince. How many frogs do I have to kiss before one of them becomes a prince? Well, the frog population is infinitely larger than the prince population. I talk with young people all the time, and my takeaway now is: You cannot define relationships. They're all over the place. One woman, age 25, recently told me, "I don't want one person. My girlfriends and I want adventures, multiple relationships. As for frogs...who knows, but there are probably people who are attracted to them. I may be OK with frogs, if they have a great sense of humor."

But I'll try to be serious because love and companionship are serious matters. My guess is that you can tell in the first hour of a date whether or not you are compatible. And don't kid yourself as luck certainly plays a role. But you do have to keep experimenting in order to get good luck to kick in. Happiness is not delivered over the transom. Do not quit this "dance of chance" because you cannot stand the game anymore. Get out there. But know that you do not have to kiss all the frogs. Keep them guessing. It's what makes the froggy jump.

This might seem like a silly question, but as it concerns finance, I'd like your input. My girlfriends and I spend a lot of money on our hair. I have actually shopped around, looking into many nice salons, and the prices are pretty much high everywhere. Yes, I know there are places where you can get a $15 haircut, but you'll probably end up regretting it. Is it worth it to spend practically a car payment on hair every six weeks? The peace of mind knowing you have a reliable person is really nice, but it's a large expense. I get it: Shoes, bags and hair. Some time ago, I took a survey of about 25 women of various ages and asked them, "What do you care most about in a frivolous way?" These three things were the most mentioned: shoes, bags and hair. My quick answer to your question would be to always have some indulgence in your life to brighten your mood, even if it's something you can feel a little bit guilty about, like getting a new hair experience—or, in my life, getting one more bow tie that I certainly don't need and may even wear only once before deciding I don't like it. Sometimes impulse can give you a lift.

But the real expert in this is my friend Karen, who has been my best street-smart source for beauty tips for a long time. She is a marketing maven as well as a barber, stylist and adviser on everything from hair and nails to tanning and love. Karen tells me, "With a little bit of research, there's so much you can do on your own on the cheap. Coloring that costs $300 dollars in a salon, you can do alone for $100. Hair extensions for $300-$800 you can do alone or with a girlfriend. Think about it. Is the person doing your hair thinking about you? Or thinking about paying the rent? Most people are talked into something. I try to teach my clients. Go to YouTube or Google stuff like 'best color for brunettes.' There are so many tutorials out there, if you search a little. So if you're fixated on cost, help yourself."

Strong opinions can be so refreshing. ◆

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

THE CHEF OPENS UP ABOUT COOKBOOKS, PASTA AND WORKING WITH JULIA CHILD

CHEF, COOKING INSTRUCTOR, INTERNATIONAL culinary tour guide, journalist and food activist Annie B. Copps published her first book, A Little Taste of Cape Cod, in April. A graduate of Boston University, Copps worked as a chef in some of Boston's best restaurants, served as an assistant to Julia Child and has been the food editor at several local, regional and national publications. The Somerville resident currently leads culinary tours throughout the world, in addition to writing and appearing as a guest on radio and television programs.

TOP 5 THINGS TO EAT IN MASSACHUSETTS

- Island Creek oysters in October and November
- Figs pizza (half Isabelle, half Oliver) with arugula salad on top
- Barbara Lynch's pasta with Bolognese sauce
- Karen Akunowicz's mussels
- Seth Raynor's magic noodles

JONATHAN SOROFF: First thing you ever learned to cook?
ANNIE B. COPPS: Gingerbread cookies with my grandmother. She passed away before I was 6, but if I smell gingerbread cookies, I can see her. She's present. I think the sense of smell is one of our strongest memory triggers.

One thing all great cookbooks have in common? The introduction to the recipes. The stories that go with them. Ideally, the header for the recipe comes from a perspective. My cookbook has a clam chowder recipe. There are thousands of clam chowder recipes, but it's what I have to say about clam chowder that makes a difference, I think.

How many cookbooks do you own? More than a thousand.

Favorite cookbook of all time? I'm going to have to go with Julia's Mastering the Art of French Cooking.

Favorite memory of Julia? She was a prankster. She used to play pranks on her sister, and at the age of 80, she was still doing practical jokes.

Funniest thing she ever said to you? "Well, dear, is he good in bed?"

Three things I will always find in your refrigerator? Mayonnaise, cheese and carrots. [Laughs.]

Three things everyone should know how to cook? Eggs. Chicken soup. And a simple pasta dish, like aglio e olio or cace e pepe.

Biggest kitchen disaster of all time? The first Thanksgiving I ever hosted. Here I was, this trained chef, and I put wine on the windowsill to chill, and it fell several stories and smashed on someone's car. The turkey wasn't defrosted, and I had to put it on top of the litter box, and the cat started eating it. It was tragic. [Laughs.]

Does food equal love? The preparation of food is an act of love. Absolutely.

Grossest thing you've ever eaten? I ate something in Japan, at a sushi place right outside the Tsukiji Fish Market. I have no idea what it was, but texturally, it had to have been some innard of a fish. It was disgusting. It didn't smell good. It did not feel pleasant on my tonguc, and it did not taste good. I swallowed it pretty quickly.

What about things like durian that everybody makes such a big fuss about? I actually really like durian. It's just the odor that's bad, but it tastes really good. I don't understand okra, though. I respect that it's a part of people's food traditions, but it's one of the few things I just really pass on.

Single favorite regional cuisine? Thai.

Favorite food city in the world? Boston. You can step out of any building and go right or left and find five great places to eat in five minutes, anywhere in Boston. I'm so impressed with what's happening in this city.

Greatest living chef? I'll go with José Andrés. I think his food is great, but his leadership in the food world, and his humanitarian efforts, are also pretty extraordinary.

If I were to show up on your doorstep unannounced, what would you feed me? Pasta. I'd probably do something super simple, like a carbonara. There's always cheese and oil and chili flakes.

Are restaurant kitchens all disgusting? Not anymore. They used to be, back in the Anthony Bourdain days, but that's an era that has passed. It's just not sustainable for any reason.

Most expensive or rarest thing you've ever eaten? Probably fresh white truffles in Piedmont. They were really just shavin''em on like I was getting a pedicure. [Laughs.]

Person you'd most like to cook for? I'd love to cook for Barack and Michelle Obama.

Favorite New England summertime meal? A lobster roll. I really love Barbara Lynch's. And then, of course, there's the lobster roll in my book.

Lobster tamale—yay or nay? Nay. I get that people like it, but it's too fancy for me.

Best ice cream in Boston? Toscanini's.

One thing no one should bother trying to make from scratch at home? Doughnuts. There's really no need to make doughnuts at home. Buy them.

Favorite kitchen gadget? The microplane grater. It came from a woodworker's rasp. They're long sticks and they're great for grating ginger, garlic, cheese. Everyone needs one.

Food trend you're sick of? The spirit-of-the-month thing. Like, gin is in right now? Guess what? Gin never went anywhere. Gin's great. Leave it alone, and shut up about it.

Food that's overrated? Kale. It's like kale got a publicist or something. Kale's fine, but it's not everything. And there's no reason to make a Caesar salad with it. So, kale, I'm so over you.

If you were on death row, what would your last meal be? I would have Margherita pizza with Caesar salad right on top of it.

Sweet or savory? Savory. I go for salty, crunchy.

One food you would never give up? Cheese.

What food allergy would you dread the most? I think I would have a hard time if I were gluten intolerant. I'm very starch- and bread-oriented. ◆

"It's like kale got a publicist or something. Kale's fine, but it's not everything.... So, kale, I'm so over you."

BEER GARDEN VARIETY

A SUMMER GUIDE TO OUTDOOR TAPROOMS

From parking lot parties to pop-up bars, there are plenty of ways to sip in the sunshine this summer thanks to beer and cider gardens sprinkled throughout the city. Not thirsty? No problem: All of these spots are into entertainment like music and lawn games—meaning it doesn't even matter if you're under 21.

CASTLE ISLAND

Castle Island marketing manager Janine Pohorely fell in love with Boston when she enrolled at Emerson College 12 years ago, but she says summer activities for out-of-town visitors can be somewhat lacking compared to other cities.

"There are amazing historical sites," Pohorely says. "But we decided that we really wanted to bring something special to a space that was underutilized, something engaging and fun."

Enter the Summer Beer Garden at Underground at Ink Block, a highway underpass connecting the South End and South Boston neighborhoods. Expected to open in mid-summer, the space will be transformed Thursday through Sunday into a hangout for all ages, with non-alcoholic options available in addition to a custom 20-tap trailer. "We're creating smaller spaces within a large space to give people little moments of their own. We wanted it to be a fun, enjoyable space—not a bar," she explains.

In addition to 15 communal picnic tables, there'll be more intimate spots with beanbag chairs and a lounge area. The kid-friendly space is also near a dog park, so pooches are welcome, too. The lineup will showcase Castle Island's core brews (Candlepin, Keeper, Hi-Def) and some seasonal drinks like fruity sour ales and rotating double IPAs—plus, the summer destination also brings the Norwood brewery a bit closer to its namesake landmark.

HOURS: Thu.-Fri., 3-10 pm; Sat.-Sun., 11 am–10 pm

Who would've thought that a trailer would provide just what City Hall Plaza needed for a makeover? Wachusett Brewing Company's Airstream at The Patios is outfitted with eight taps, providing pints for up to 333 visitors on the pavilion. The nine custom spaces were constructed using reclaimed wood and boast greenery, wooden benches and covered tables, bringing a breath of fresh air to an underutilized public space.

"City Hall has long been known as the 'ugly' concrete building and now all of a sudden you've got a really cool space overlooking Faneuil Hall with a fresh breeze coming through, with a wooden bar that breaks up all the brick," says Wachusett president Christian McMahan. "It's really that feeling when you've got a cold beer in your hand at a rooftop bar, hanging with your friends. You can grab an ice cream, pet a puppy or head out to a great nearby restaurant," he adds of the Honeycomb Creamery stand and Wag Wednesdays dog adoption meet-and-greet.

Like at the Central Mass.-based brewery, the community space has dog biscuits for the furriest of friends, and The Patios are also kid-friendly with complimentary mini-golf. McMahan says the spirit of welcoming all is largely indicative of the microbrew industry, and Wachusett is keeping one of its tap lines open as a rotating guest spot. Brand diehards can count on 16-ounce pours of Wachusett's City of Champions line—Green Monsta IPA, Brewin' American Pale Ale, Bella Czech Pils and Belgian White Mamba. Gluten-free friends can try Nauti alcoholic seltzers (including a new rosé flavor), plus wine from a to-be-announced partner.

"We're going to rotate in a couple of hard-to-find beers, so you'll definitely find something fun and interesting each time you visit us, like a new IPA or fruit beer," McMahan says. And you can also find Blueberry Ale, one of the brews that put Wachusett on the map. "What's more summer than blueberry, after all?"

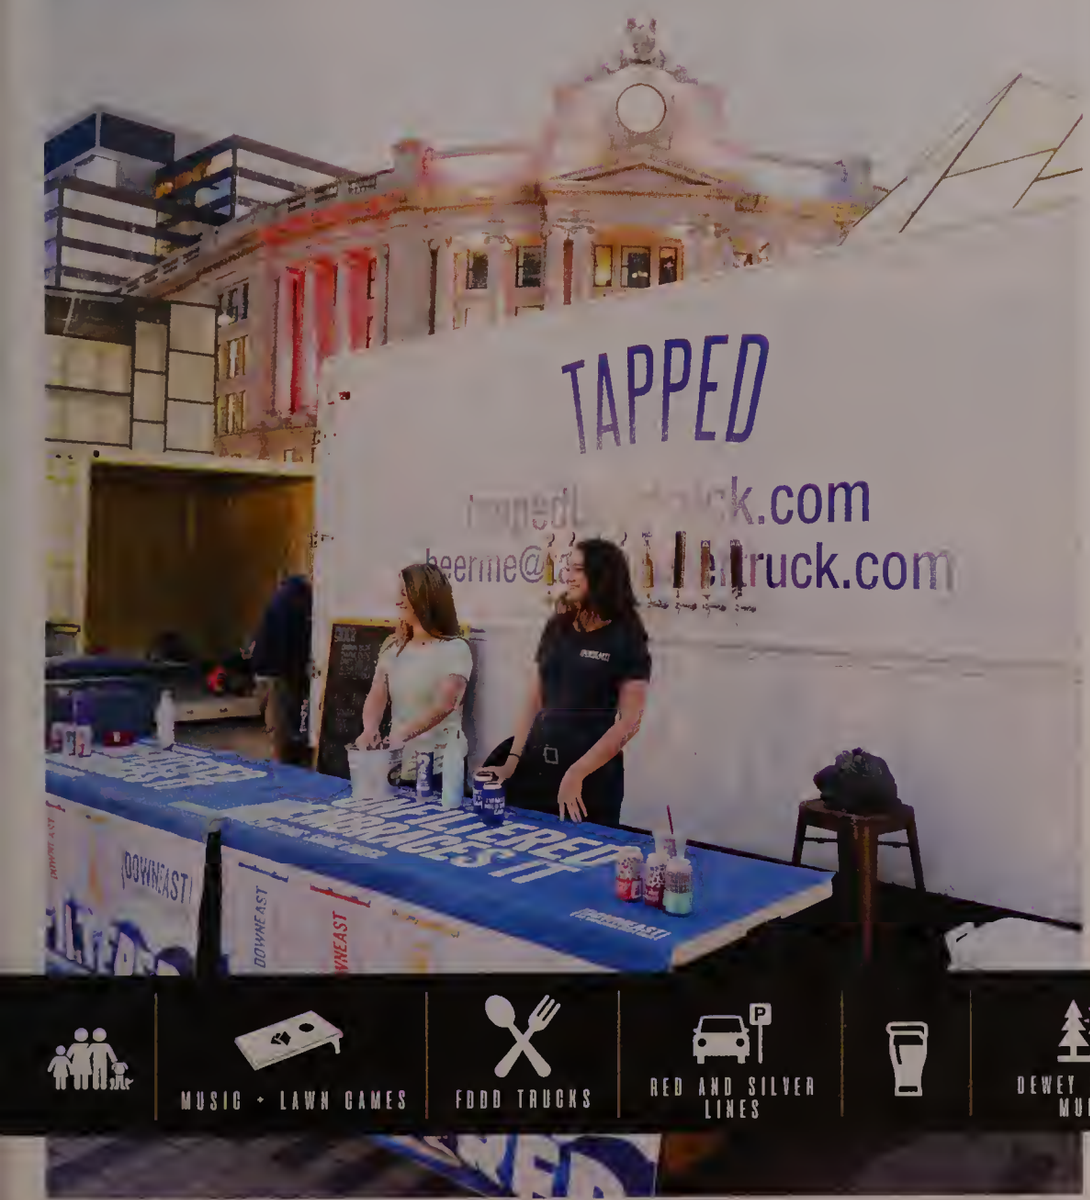
DOWNEAST



South Station commuters might be happy if their train is running late this summer thanks to Downeast's Back Porch, a 5,000-square-foot space in Dewey Square run by the East Boston cider company.

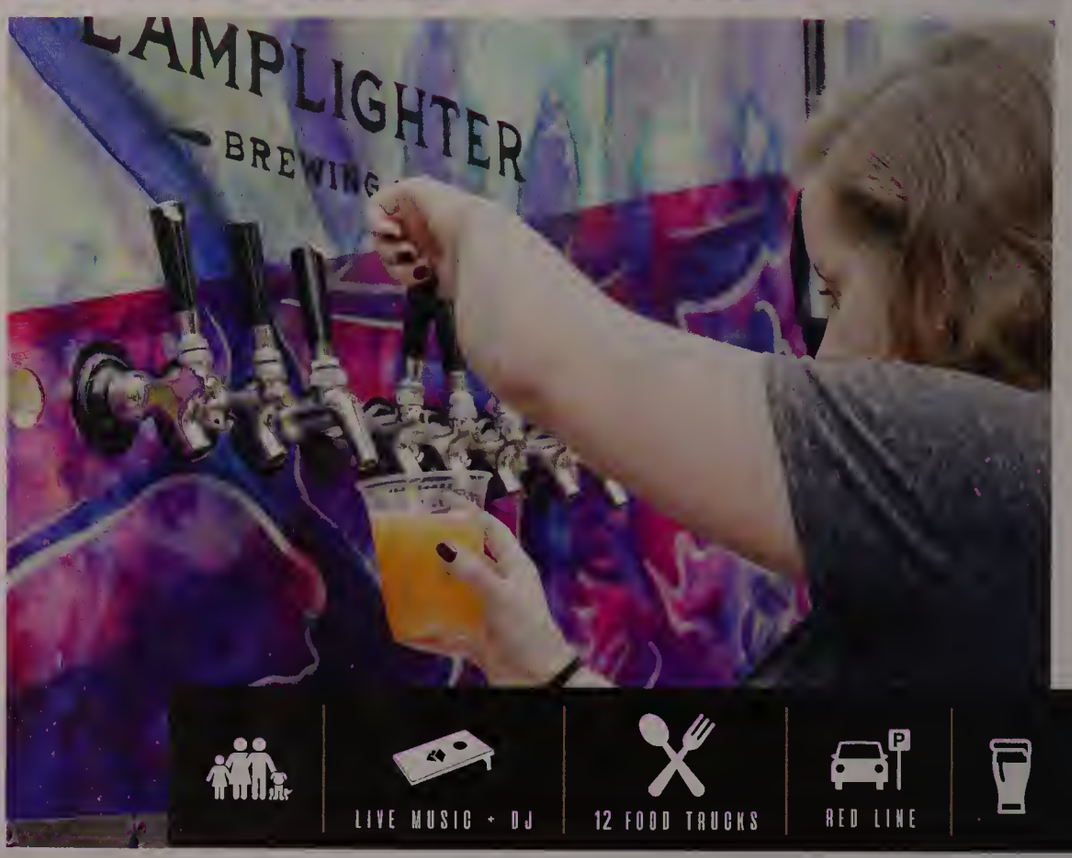
Although the spot's zoned for more people, marketing director Nick Lamothe says Downeast is keeping capacity at 400. "We didn't want it to be super-crowded, and there should be elbow room for everyone to raise a toast or just play cornhole. We could make a bigger profit, but it just takes away part of the experience if it's packed."

Downeast will truly differentiate itself from the crowd by focusing on its unfiltered craft cider made with apples locally sourced from Stow. There's also one tap dedicated to a rotating selection of local beer vendors, as well as canned wine and a Back Porch-exclusive mint lemonade cider. Customers can chill out by listening to local music and if they're stuck in line, they can enjoy a complimentary popsicle on hot days.

But while you might put off your to-do list to sip some cider, Downeast organizers don't have that luxury. Unlike the other beer gardens that are permanent fixtures from Memorial Day through October—including last year's Greenway star Trillium, which reprises its glory again at a spot near the Aquarium—Downeast must set up and break down stools, cask barrels with umbrellas and tap lines within just a few hours to make way for the biweekly Dewey Square farmers markets and Boston Calling block parties.

HOURS: Mon., Wed. and Fri., 4-9 pm; Sat., noon–9 pm; Sun., noon–7 pm

LAMPLIGHTER BREWING CO.



You never know what treasures you may find at the Central Flea—and, according to Lamplighter Brewing co-founder Cayla Marvil, the same goes for the beers. "We're always pulling our favorites, trying to bring a huge range of styles. If someone comes and wants something sour, fermented or light, we've got it," she says. "We try not to have a 'flagship,' but keep it different and interesting. You're always going to have something new to try."

There's definitely more to sample now that the Flea has swapped out monthly events at a paved parking lot for weekly gatherings on a new grassy space at University Park (behind Lafayette Square Fire House in Cambridgeport). And there's more room for free-flowing fun—like 50 vintage and antiques vendors, 60 artists and 20 fair-trade purveyors—just a few blocks away from Lamplighter's home base. "A huge component of us starting was to be in Cambridge and be really accessible in the heart of the city. Plus, we always wanted an outdoor facility. Now our commute to the Flea is literally five blocks away," Marvil says.

Besides the hops-intensive brews that are hugely popular in New England, Lamplighter is also going hyper-local at its covered cargo trailer by offering Bantam cider and coffee from Cambridge's Longfellows (using Barrington Coffee-roasted beans). All this in a 150-person space that features long standing tables set up with card games and cornhole nearby.

LIMITED STREET PARKING

Live music has always been welcome at Aeronaut's Somerville digs, which also hosts trivia and board game nights in addition to LGBT gatherings. And for Aeronaut's arts and culture liaison Jason McCool, the brewery's summer spot in Allston continues that commitment.

"We have a lot of community partnerships and awareness campaigns at the same time as these really amazing bands and singer/songwriters," McCool says. "You can bring your kids or your co-workers, but drinking craft beer and hearing music together is really so much about building this community that we all crave and love."

That community comes together in Zone 3, where Harvard turned a former parking lot at 267 Western Ave. into an outdoor performance space featuring a circular platform, a gently sloping grass amphitheater and spots in the sun and shade. Accommodating hundreds of customers in the revamped location, there are plenty of opportunities to show off some of the city's most talented performers—and the best and brightest of Aeronaut's brews.

"Too many times when people talk about Boston's arts scene, they talk about buildings and not people. A big part of Harvard's mission is expanding a creative environment and cool things for people to do in that area, which is why we're so excited to have a hand in that," McCool says. As far as creative brews, Aeronaut will release a summer beer garden exclusive once a month in addition to the regular lineup you can find at the Somerville brewery.

TACO TUESDAY! HUEVO WEDNESDAY! TORTA THURSDAY!

CELEBRATE ALL WEEK WITH THESE MEXICAN FAVORITES

MARGARITA MONDAY

For its refresh, revive, repeat margarita ($15), Tico infuses Casamigos blanco tequila with cucumber and jalapeno for three days before it's shaken with Patrón Citrónge, lime juice and agave. Ideal for sipping on the Back Bay restaurant's patio, this drink leads with a spicy kick that's tempered by cool cucumber

Yellow Door Taqueria's top-selling coconut margarita ($11) is a creamy compliment to the Dorchester spot's Mexi-Cali fare. This tropical sip combines blanco tequila, a housemade coconut lime cordial, Naranja orange liqueur and lime juice. Bonus: A toasted coconut rim gives customers a double dose of the fruit.

Subtly sweet with a touch of spice, Masa's habanero watermelon margarita ($12) blends a fresh fruity puree, Combier, orange juice and agave nectar with reposado tequila infused with dried habanero. Served with a lime wedge, the concoction is only $8 during the South End spot's Margarita Mondays

1 Keith Schubert classifies this cornmeal-crusted mushroom taco ($4) as the most earthy-tasting offering at Taco Party, his Somerville vegan restaurant. "The salsa roja made from guajillo peppers paired with the light corn salsa offsets this earthiness," Schubert says. The meatiness of the mushroom coupled with light toppings, including arugula, makes for a balanced bite.

2 Tu Y Yo's mini appetizer of tacos de chapulines ($13.50) packs a spicy and salty crunch thanks to a combination of guajillo, ancho and árbol chiles and fried grasshoppers. For a boost of flavor, chef/co-owner Adolfo Alvarado adds onions, tomatoes and the herb epazote. Alvarado boasts: "Once you combine the poblano sauce with the taco, it has an amazing taste."

Chef Allan Rodriguez looks to the past for inspiration on how to prepare the slow-cooked beef for this barbacoa taco ($5) at El Centro's three local spots. "We cook the beef overnight with a special recipe from the 1920s from my grandmother in Mexico," says Rodriguez, who will open a fourth restaurant in Dedham this month. The beef is served in a homemade corn tortilla and dressed with a hint of guacamole and lime before it's topped with pickled red onions.

TACO TUESDAY

HUEVO WEDNESDAY

To make the sausage that stars in the papas con chorizo ($8), Lone Star chef Rod MacDonald marinates the whole pork butt overnight in a blend of spices including ancho chili, sweet and smoked paprika and cinnamon, before grinding the meat and mixing in poblanos. It's served with roasted sweet and red bliss potatoes for a counterpoint to the smoky spice, and MacDonald adds: "The yolk from the fried egg ties the whole dish together."

1 Combining silky textures with salty and creamy flavors, the polenta ($13) at La Brasa is rounded out with delicata squash, fried eggs and peperonata—a mixture of roasted red peppers, charred red onion, paprika, red wine vinegar, brown sugar and tomatoes. "Polenta and runny egg yolks are a magic combination just like butter and popcorn," says chef/owner Daniel Bojorquez. "The texture of this dish is nurturing, the ingredients are relatable and it's everyone's idea of a family breakfast."

TORTA THURSDAY

Campechana means a combination of ingredients, and this campechana torta ($8) at Tenoch certainly mixes a lot: carnitas, chorizo, beans, avocado, tomatoes, Oaxaca cheese, onions and chipotle mayo. "The ingredients are like an orchestra and every one of them represents an instrument," co-owner Andrés Sandoval says. "When the ingredients play at the same time, they create a masterpiece."

1 At the center of the blackened fish torta ($14) is a spice-rubbed mahi-mahi, but that's far from the only component. The sandwich is layered with a radish and cilantro salad, serrano and pickled jalapeño mayo, pork charro beans and tres quesos and is served on grilled telera bread alongside a pickled vegetable salad and an extra helping of pork charro beans. Painted Burro chef/owner Joe Cassinelli says: "It's nice and light for the summer with a little bit of a kick."

2 This might seem like an upgraded grilled cheese, but it's a fruit—not delicious dairy—that's the star of this sandwich at Loco Taqueria & Oyster Bar. The avocado stands out in the eponymous avocado melt torta ($10), made with a mix of Chihuahua and Oaxaca cheeses, sliced tomatoes and topped with a smoked tomato aioli. "The spiciness of the aioli really is cut by the fresh avocado," says executive chef Matt Drummond.

1 It appears Forrest Gump's pal Bubba missed one shrimp variety: shrimp flautas ($8.50). Luckily, Casa Romero offers them as a crispy appetizer. Tortillas are stuffed with prawns, deep-fried until crunchy and then served atop a generous layer of guacamole and accompanied by an array of sides, including Mexican sour cream, pickled red cabbage, pico de gallo and salsa verde.

2 These flautas ($6.50) at Rincón Mexicano put a comfort-food spin on a Mexican staple. A mixture of shredded chicken, mashed potatoes and cheese with adobo seasoning is placed on a bed of lettuce and tomato sauce before the dish is topped with red and green salsa, sour cream and queso fresco. "The combination of all these ingredients together is mind-blowing," says owner Lorenzo Reyes.

Inspired by his culinary tour through Mexico City, Citrus & Salt owner Jason Santos' duck confit flautas ($10) look like they have a load of flavor on the outside with trimmings like crunchy cabbage, cold tomatillo salsa, pickled onions, cheddar and a drizzle of smoky crème fraîche. But it's the duck inside that really packs the flavor, as it's seasoned with spices, seeds and even Mexican chocolate before it's tucked into a corn tortilla and fried.

FLAUTA FRIDAY

If you've got Champagne taste but a salsa budget, Casa Verde's mango salsa features Champagne mangoes mixed with lime juice, red onions, serrano chiles, cooked mezcal and housemade chili powder. The tropical fruit adds a burst of sweetness to the spicy and smoky flavors, and Owen Royce Nagel, chef at the Jamaica Plain spot, serves the salsa on the new cider-braised pork belly taco ($6).

1 The black salsa ($1.50) at Villa Mexico Cafe is so good that owner Julie King says some customers put it in vanilla ice cream or atop a buttered piece of toast. Made with tomatoes, peppers, garlic and salt, the secret is to smoke and burn the peppers. It takes two days to make one batch, and King says getting the cooking length just right is an art. "A lot of people have been trying to imitate it, but they can't."

2 El Pelon chef Jose Torres knows the consistency of salsa is key to success. Too runny and there's no texture for dipping. Too thick and you can't spread it easily. The fire-roasted salsa ($4) threads that needle and adds a kick from a few different types of peppers—including habaneros—and onions. After the ingredients are roasted, he mixes them in a large container until the texture—and consistency—is just right.

SALSA SATURDAY

SOTOL SUNDAY

Move over tequila and mezcal—there's a new Mexican spirit in town. Found a bit farther north in Chihuahua, Coahuila and Durango, sotol is made from one of 16 plant varieties. "Desert spoon was originally thought to be a type of agave, but is actually closely related to asparagus," explains Backbar manager Carlo Caroscio. "Unlike agave, which can only be harvested once and may take a decade to mature, sotol can be harvested several times throughout its life." Backbar stocks sixth-generation distiller Sotol Por Siempre, which roasts the plant underground – instead of steaming it—for a subtle smokiness. Caroscio mixes this Tumbling Dice cocktail ($13), "a bitter, herbal, slow sipper modeled on a Negroni," with Suze, Italicus and blanc vermouth.

Along with under-the-radar agave-based spirits such as raicilla and bacanora, Bodega Canal offers Hacienda de Chihuahua's Anejo Sotol ($10) from Moët-bred distiller José Daumas Gil de Partearroyo. Ask to swap it in a margarita, or beverage director Mike Wyatt suggests first-timers sip it neat to catch the full flavor: "It's got some earthy and grassy notes to it with a bit of vanilla and caramel from aging."

Celeste's Latin American bar program highlights the mineral-driven Fabriquero ($10), found in the Malverde ($14), a combination of elderflower, yuzu, mint and cucumber. Says bar manager Paola Ibarra: "Sotol enhances the fresh and citrusy flavors of Peruvian ceviche and causas, and is also a good option to anticipate or follow the hearty stews on the menu." Come back soon for a taste of Sotol Coyote—one brand that's not yet available locally.

WON'T YOU BE MY NEIGHBOR?

★★★ 1/2 Button up your sweater, lace up those sneakers and run to the nearest theater showing this affectionate portrait of the late Fred Rogers, the kind-hearted television host who guided generations of children through emotional ups and downs, treating them with a respect that they rarely received elsewhere. Bring tissues, too. Even if you weren't fortunate enough to have grown up with Fred (affectionately known as Mister Rogers) and the life lessons and civility he imparted on our nation's youth throughout the second half of the 20th century, the waterworks will open up at some point during this nostalgic documentary, which will make you wish you did. Director Morgan Neville (Oscar winner of best documentary for 20 Feet from Stardom) has the unenviable task of distilling nearly 900 episodes of low-budget, but miraculously magical public programming involving hand puppets and toy trolleys into 94 minutes of basic human decency and kindness—which is something we could all use in these deeply divided times. In addition to memorable clips of Mister Rogers' Neighborhood, the film is made up of photos, home videos and archival interviews with Fred himself, as well as new interviews with his friends, family and members of his cast and crew, which have been blended together with animated segues and smiles—lots and lots of smiles. Perhaps you've seen footage of Fred addressing the U.S. Senate back in 1969, single-handedly convincing them to allocate $20 million toward continued funding of PBS. This movie might just make a contributor out of you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.) / Brett Michel

ADRIFT ★★1/2 Baltasar Kormákur—director of 2015's Everest—does a bit better with his latest real-life tale of adventurers taking on the elements, thanks in no small part to the chemistry of the film's two leads. But viewer, beware: A third-act twist nearly capsizes what starts out as an engaging story of survival set on the high seas. Based on Tami Oldham Ashcraft's memoir, Adrift stars Shailene Woodley (also one of this movie's producers) and Sam Claflin (co-star of The Hunger Games films) as Tami, a free spirited dockworker, and Richard Sharp, the world-traveling British sailor from whom she becomes inseparable. Setting sail from Tahiti toward Tami's home port of San Diego, the two lovers have no way of anticipating that they're headed directly into one of the most catastrophic hurricanes in recorded history. Using a structure that alternates between flashbacks of their budding romance and a post-accident present that finds Tami struggling to keep her badly injured boyfriend alive after pulling him from the sea, screenwriters David Branson Smith (Ingrid Goes West) and twins Aaron and Jordan Kandell (Disney's Moana) focus on the couple's past pleasures to help pull them—and the audience—through their harrowing situation. With very little food and little hope for rescue, Tami struggles to find the inner strength to save the man she hopes to spend the rest of her life with. It's a pity the filmmakers didn't trust the strength of the true story, relying on a late twist to add unnecessary drama. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Avengers: Infinity War ★★★1/2 Even at two-and-a-half hours, this 19th movie set within the ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe wouldn't seem to have the time necessary to service the more than two dozen characters that star in Avengers: Infinity War. But against all odds, nearly all of Marvel's superheroes get a moment to shine as they team up to stop the biggest threat that the world—and the galaxy—has ever faced. Picking up moments after the conclusion of last year's comic gem, Thor: Ragnarok, brothers Joe and Anthony Russo take viewers on a significantly darker ride. The directors of the past two Captain America pictures drop us into a devastating attack on the transport ship that was housing Thor (Chris Hemsworth) and the remnants of his Asgardian civilization, perpetrated by the purple-skinned, golden-armored Thanos. Portrayed in a superbly understated motion-capture performance by Josh Brolin, this towering figure plans to bring balance to the universe by indiscriminately wiping out half of all life. Marvel favorites like Cap (Chris Evans), Spider-Man (Tom Holland), Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Doctor Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch) and the Guardians of the Galaxy (Chris Pratt et al.) pair off into unexpected and pleasurable groupings spanning five or six concurrent plotlines, culminating in a devastating ending that packs a wallop. Recalling a classical tragedy like The Empire Strikes Back, Infinity War shakes up the status quo, leaving you hungry for next year's as-yet-untitled sequel. And like the next issue of your favorite comic, it can't come soon enough. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Book Club ★★ Imagine a reality where your life is forever changed by reading E.L. James' Fifty Shades of Grey series as part of the monthly, wine-infused book club you enjoy with three of your lifelong buds. Personally, I couldn't even conceive of dragging any of my friends to the awful movie adaptations of these books, but they're hardly the target audience for this unintentionally hilarious "erotica." My friends also wouldn't get much out of filmmaker Bill Holderman's Book Club, which functions as a vastly more upscale, easy laugh update of The Golden Girls. In other words, I'd take my retired mother in a heartbeat to see this movie about a widow (Diane Keaton) who's ready for new adventures—and is soon picked up by a handsome airline pilot (Andy Garcia) after he spots her embarrassingly enjoying a copy of James' best-selling "mommy porn." I'm sure my mom would laugh uproariously at the Viagra gag that makes for an outstanding scene between Diane's chef pal Carol (Mary Steenburgen) and her husband Bruce (Craig T. Nelson), but who knows how she'd react to divorced federal judge Sharon (Candice Bergen) and her internet dates or single hotelier Vivian (Jane Fonda) and her sexual appetite. They'd certainly give her a lot to talk about at the retirement home, though! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Deadpool 2 ★ Here's the official plot synopsis for Deadpool 2, courtesy of 20th Century Fox: "After surviving a near fatal bovine attack, a disfigured cafeteria chef (Wade Wilson) struggles to fulfill his dream of becoming Mayberry's hottest bartender, while also learning to cope with his lost sense of taste. Searching to regain his spice for life, as well as a flux capacitor, Wade must battle ninjas, the yakuza and a pack of sexually aggressive canines, as he journeys around the world to discover the importance of family, friendship, and flavor—finding a new taste for adventure and earning the coveted coffee mug title of World's Best Lover." If only. Despite the studio's claims, ex-special forces operative Wilson (Ryan Reynolds) is actually back for more of the same in his second go-round as Deadpool. But if "The Merc with a Mouth" was the class clown when last we saw him, he's graduated to becoming the hanger-on who hurls insults—plus an inexplicable stream of pop culture references that might be funny if you're the one who enjoys Family Guy. Surprisingly, Deadpool 2 has become the very thing the first film laughed at. Poking fun at superhero movie conventions doesn't excuse you from adhering to them. And while director David Leitch (Atomic Blonde, John Wick) is working with a fraction of the budget of, say, Avengers: Infinity War, he's also made a film with a fraction of that picture's entertainment value. But at least one person should enjoy themselves: After playing villains in both films, Josh Brolin must be laughing

First Reformed ★★★1/2 Four decades ago, Paul Schrader made his name when he wrote the screenplays for Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver (1976) and Raging Bull (1980). If he'd done nothing else, the 71-year-old's place in cinema history would be secure. However, he also directed 23 movies, many of which he also wrote. And while pictures like American Gigolo (1980) and his remake of 1942's Cat People (1982) found their audiences, it's his scripts for Scorsese that have defined his career. So, it's only fitting that his newest film as a writer/director works as a spiritual successor to his earliest collaboration with Scorsese. It's also damn near a masterpiece. Ethan Hawke plays the Rev. Ernst Toller, a solitary, hard-drinking pastor at a small Dutch Reform church that functions primarily as a tourist spot in upstate New York, because of its early history as a stop along the Underground Railroad. First Reformed, as it's called, is soon to be celebrating its 250th anniversary, but its dwindling congregation has been eclipsed by Abundant Life, its nearby parent church that caters to a flock of thousands with its state-of-the-art facilities. Toller still has his dedicated parishioners, including Mary (Amanda Seyfried). Pregnant and in need of help, she enlists Toller's aid in counseling her husband, Michael (Philip Ettinger), a radical environmentalist who's lost his way. And while Schrader doesn't quite possess the filmmaking prowess of Scorsese, he frames his deeply troubling look at a crisis of faith as a spellbinding sermon you can't look away from. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Life of the Party ★★★ Melissa McCarthy reteams with husband Ben Falcone for their third collaboration after Tammy and The Boss, and this charming college comedy, co-written by the couple and directed by Falcone, is easily the best of the three. And while dynamo McCarthy built her reputation playing dimwitted forces of nature like her Oscar-nominated character in Bridesmaids, she's working in a far more thoughtful mode in this film. Think of her Deanna as a cousin of Susan, McCarthy's character in Paul Feig's 2015 action comedy Spy. Both transform from put-upon women into newfound versions of their best selves, freed from longtime perceptions that have kept them boxed in. In both cases, the women are able to tap into their hibernating sexuality with liberating results. Immediately after Deanna and her husband, Dan (Matt Walsh), drop off their daughter Maddie (Molly Gordon of TNT's Animal Kingdom) for her final year of college at her parents' alma mater, Dan abruptly dumps his wife, confessing to infidelity and requesting a divorce. Reassessing her life choices, Deanna decides to complete the final year of the archaeology degree she put on hold when she became pregnant during her senior year of college. Soon—and to the initial dismay of Maddie—Deanna settles back into college life with surprising ease, making fast friends with her daughter's sorority sisters while sowing her oats with frat boy Jack (Luke Benward), with who she shares an amusing connection. Surprisingly sweet-natured, this is an enjoyable return to school. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

On Chesil Beach ★★★ Novelist Ian McEwan (Atonement) adapts his novella set during a single hour in a hotel room into this screenplay that's filled with flashbacks upon flashbacks to flesh out the personal histories of the newlywed protagonists. But unfortunately, the couple remains largely internalized on the pages of McEwan's best-selling story. Saoirse Ronan and relative newcomer Billy Howle (both currently appearing in Michael Mayer's Chekhov adaptation, The Seagull) take center stage in first-time director Dominic Cooke's On Chesil Beach. The year is 1962, and Florence Ponting (Ronan) is a wealthy young classical violinist who first locks eyes with Edward Mayhew (Howle), a history scholar of humble origins, at a nuclear protest. It's love at first sight, not only for the two lovers, but also for Edward's schoolteacher father, Lionel (Adrian Scarborough), who immediately pulls his son aside after meeting Florence, instructing him to "marry this girl." Florence also brings out the best in Edward's mother, Marjorie (Anne-Marie Duff), whose brain damage leads to a nudist streak. Florence's conservative mother, Violet (Emily Watson), on the other hand, has enough wits about her to be mortified by this relationship, which builds to a breaking point during the newlyweds' quarrel that the film is built around. Throughout the narrative juggling, Cooke manages to cast a nice spell, grounded by a solid sense of time and place. Sadly, that all breaks down with the introduction of rubbery old age makeup, which robs the film's coda of some of its heartbreak. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Solo: A Star Wars Story ★1/2 Unlike Gareth Edwards' surprisingly enjoyable war movie/heist picture Rogue One—the first standalone Star Wars film to deviate from the episodes focusing on the Skywalker clan—Ron Howard's Han Solo origin story suffers greatly from what was probably always going to be an identity crisis. Howard replaced Solo's original directors, Phil Lord and Christopher Miller, after they'd already shot three-quarters of a script co-authored by fan favorite Lawrence Kasdan, who penned The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi. Perhaps nobody could have filled the boots of 75-year-old Harrison Ford, who first took on Han Solo in 1977. Alden Ehrenreich, 28, brings a bit of swagger to his portrayal, but he lacks the hot-headed temperament best embodied by the combination of Ford's icy stare and his Finger Point of Doom. Amazingly, this signature gesture isn't convincingly deployed even once in this Western-influenced noir that doubles as yet another heist-driven Star Wars movie. To be honest, it'd be shocking if anyone could pull off a film about a proto-Solo, but it would have been interesting to see what kind of gonzo comic tone that Lord and Miller—best known for The Lego Movie, along with 21 Jump Street and its sequel—were conjuring for their visit to a galaxy far, far away. Alas, it only lifts into orbit whenever Donald Glover slips into one of Billy Dee Williams' super-fly capes as a spectacularly believable Lando Calrissian. The Force is weak with this one. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Upgrade ★★★ At the twisted nerve center of actor and writer-turned-director Leigh Whannell's low-budget horror/thriller is an artificial intelligence that's soon to be implanted into the neo-cortex of Grey Trace (Logan Marshall-Green), a Luddite car mechanic who feels woefully out of place in a near future that's not as utopian as it seems. Case in point: the violent mugging that kills his wife Asha (Melanie Vallejo) and leaves him a quadriplegic. But when Eron (Harrison Gilbertson)—the Elon Musk-like billionaire who Grey recently constructed an old-fashioned muscle car for—offers to restore use of the grease monkey's limbs, Grey reluctantly agrees. The experimental procedure will fuse an AI chip dubbed STEM (voiced by actor Simon Maiden, who supplies his best HAL 9000 impression) onto his spine. It's here that Whannell's darkly comic horror impulses—the 41-year-old Aussie is one of the creators of the Saw franchise—overtake the film, just as STEM takes control of Grey's motor functions. It turns out that STEM provides not only arm and leg movement, but also an automated (and inventively well-choreographed) killing ability that comes in handy when Whannell transforms his film into a Death Wish-styled revenge picture as the unusual buddy team of Grey and STEM track down Asha's killers with a detective (Get Out's Betty Gabriel) hot on their trail. It's silly, predictable fun for audiences who enjoy old-school splashes of creative violence. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

PARROT-DISE School's out—or soon to be out—for summer. That means play is in, especially at Fuller Craft Museum's latest exhibit FORTitude: The Art of Play, a companion to its Playtime in the Making exhibit that explores how play contributes to the four stages of creativity. FORTitude, a collaboration between tiny house builder Deek Diedricksen, woodworker/designer Palo Coleman and mural artist Felipe Ortiz, welcomes viewers to incorporate the lessons of the Playtime exhibit while exploring freeform play in the interactive forts and jungle-inspired landscapes. The mixed-media installation also allows museumgoers to immerse themselves alongside bright, tropical scenery such as in Ortiz's Pacifican Refuge mural. Fly into the jungle at Fuller Craft Museum to catch FORTitude: The Art of Play through Sept. 16. / Julia Aparicio

LUST FOR LIFE

Coming out in 1976, Lise Weil embraced her sexuality during a time when lesbian feminism was at an all-time high. Her memoir, In Search of Pure Lust, paints a portrait of lesbian culture in the '70s and '80s, while drawing a parallel between the desire and knowledge Weil found in herself and the women around her. After 15 years of passionate yet unsuccessful affairs and political turmoil, a desperate Weil agrees to accompany a friend on a Zen retreat—where she finds enlightenment and something like real love. Search out the author when she comes to Harvard Book Store on June 22. / Cathryn Haight

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

CHARLESMARK HOTEL AND LOUNGE [655 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-247-1212, Charlesmarkhotel.com] 40 room Luxury boutique hotel. Located at the marathon finish line across from the BPL. Location, value and ambiance are keys to their success. The lounge is a stylish popular neighborhood after work location featuring Martinis and flatbread pizzas. Wine tasting parties are famous here. Private event space available. Coming this fall a new restaurant concept. Stay tuned.

HARBORSIDE INN AND LUXURY LOUNGE [185 State Street, Boston, 617-723-7500, Harborsideinnbostom.com] 116 room boutique hotel, Location, value and stylish décor are the trademarks of this popular hotel. The Luxury lounge inside the hotel features after work entertainment. Fridays and Saturdays provide a DJ and dancing. The space is available for Private Events. State of the art lights and sound with custom high end design make this a hidden gem.

Brunch

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays. Grill centric favorites include the North Carolina Pulled Pork & Eggs, Eggs Diablo, and The Burger Benedict Deluxe. Enjoy all with glasses or pitchers of Back Deck's Jerk Bloody Mary or Berkshire Summer, with craft gin and restaurant squeezed lemonade.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] Join us for our Acoustic Brunch as Chef Owner Jamie Mammano puts his modern spin on classic brunch dishes. Our impressive bar offers a variety of craft cocktails and playful options for Bloody Mary's! Brunch served Sunday's from 10am to 2pm. Breakfast and Lunch served weekdays, Dinner daily. Mooo.... also offers an impressive Wine Cellar and private Parlor Suites; the solution to successful business or social entertaining. Open All Major Holidays, adjacent to XV Beacon Hotel.

WHAT A DRAG

For those who enjoy a few feathers and sequins with their bloody marys, Club Cafe is the place to be for Drag Brunch, the annual fundraiser organized by big-haired and even bigger-hearted drag diva Verna Turbulence to raise money for the Boston Living Center.

Present and accounted for: smokeshow Mark Leonardo, the super sparkly Joe Posa, brassy dame Sharyn Fircman, Scandinavian beauty Anja Kola, North Carolina cutie Connie Brown, the stunning Gina Fox, fashion icon Yolanda Cellucci and her dashing husband, Daniel, red-hot redhead Sonia Garufi, the statuesque Jane Conway Caspe, LGBTQ activist John Affuso, and one woman who said, "I need another drink; I'm meeting my family for dinner in two hours."

The afternoon's best remark: "It's not fair that half the men in this room look better than I do in a ball gown."

It has to be a fairly major to-do to get the city's top socialites and philanthropists out on a Monday night, but the Huntington Theater Company's annual gala, Spotlight Spectacular, drew them to the BCA's Cyclorama like moths to a flame.

On-hand for the elegant evening: honoree Neal Balkowitsch and his other half, Donald Nelson, co-chairs Carol Deane, Maria Gerrity and Ann Hall, the swanlike Gale Minot, art collectors Debbie and Bob First, real estate mack daddy Danny Mullin, the formidable Sharon Malt, painter and beauty-lover Anne Fitzpatrick, grand old man John Spooner, the aptly named Fancy Zilberfarb, Chanel factotum Michael Tilley, hippie chick Cheryl Franklin, the ethereal Mary Wolfson, party planner extraordinaire Bryan Rafanelli, the ubiquitous Ricardo Rodriguez and Michael Kelley, political operative Bonnie Berger and her handsome other half, Merle, and others of an equally elevated ilk.

Awards were presented, a live auction raised huge amounts of money and the musical performances were (needless to say) first-rate.

The most amusing comment of the evening: "Here I am, just a fountain of fun, talking about death and divorce."

OPEN MOUTH, INSERT FOOT

Like the swallows coming back to San Juan Capistrano, Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops returned to Symphony Hall, kicking their season off in grand style with an Opening Night Concert that featured a centennial tribute to Leonard Bernstein, with special guest, pop crooner Andy Grammer.

Seen milling about the bar before the performance: dulcet-voiced radio host Ron Della Chiesa and the flawless Joyce, Microsoft muckety muck Kate Shamon, music scribe Jim Sullivan and the fetching Roza Yarchun, redheaded hotties Andrew Royer and Patrick McCarron, the sprightly Matthew Finn, fashion plate Alli Achtmeyer and the adoring Bill, and one person who offered the following review of a newly opened restaurant: "Well, they certainly put the teeny in martini."

Among the fun facts uncovered during the course of the evening: Bernstein originally intended to name West Side Story "East Side Story," which prompted someone to say, "Oh, dueling Chanel bags at dawn."

As for the evening's best exchange: "You should come hear me sing in church."

"Hell, yeah!"

NO PARKING ON THE DANCE FLOOR

Q: What's hot and pink and shimmering all over? (Get your mind out of the gutter.)

A: The Hot Pink Party to benefit the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, one of the major highlights of Boston's gala season, held at the InterContinental Hotel.

The everybody-who's-anybody crowd, mostly dressed in some shade of pink, included the likes of honorees Catherine Kaelin and Heather and Rob Shanahan, Brazilian fashion plate Sinesia Karol with husband Bill, blond knockout Linda Holliday and the extremely lucky Bill Belichick, event founder Sandy Krakoff and the delightful Hope, party pair Judy and Larry Schlager, Tiffany stud Thomas Bosick, Chestnut Hillions Linda and Dan Waintrup, petite powerhouse Madeleine Capino and her other half, John, Tufts bigwig Irwin Heller and the lovely Sheila, uber-philanthropists Sandy and Paul Edgerley, the bewitching Minou Palandjian and just about every other person of substance and means within a 100-mile radius.

Everything about the evening—from cocktails to dinner to the speakers and the auction—was flawless, but the undisputed climax was multiple Grammy winner Nile Rodgers (a cancer survivor himself) and the Ladies of Chic (think "Le Freak"), who had everyone staying out past their bedtime and shaking their booties on the dance floor.

As one woman put it, "I always know I'm going to sacrifice a pair of Louboutins at this party." ◆

HEART OF A CHAMP

IT WAS A COUPLE OF HOURS INTO our time with Aly Raisman—a few minutes after photographer Brian Doben had started snapping his camera—when the 24-year-old gold medal gymnast commented: "It feels good to smile. I don't get to smile in these shoots lately." Raisman repeated a similar sentiment to Jonathan Soroff during her interview, telling him about the physical and mental toll that followed in the months after she publicly disclosed her sexual abuse. As our Boston's Best cover star prepares to accept the Arthur Ashe Courage Award at the ESPY Awards in July, the survivor reveals she's in a better place now.

There's no doubt that society is in a better place after women such as Raisman have come forward to share their stories of abuse. The courage she displayed giving a statement in court was an emotional and empowering moment that hopefully will inspire other abuse victims to speak out. It's not a stretch to say that—even after winning six Olympic medals—the Massachusetts native is making us prouder than she ever has. This past year, she's really been Boston's Best.

I hope you celebrate her story of strength as well as the carefully selected 213 winners of our Boston's Best Awards. They might not scale Raisman's great heights, but they've still got some incredible offerings, from the Southeast Asian-inspired brunch at Tiger Mama to the bespoke timepieces from Back Bay Watch Company. Congrats to the hundreds of winners that make this city so vibrant.

THE COLONIAL THEATRE STAGES A COMEBACK

A New Act Is Rising

Emerson Colonial Theatre
emersoncolonialtheatre.com

Whether it was Oklahoma!, Carousel or A Little Night Music, Boston's Colonial Theatre was fertile ground for pre-Broadway shows in the 20th century. And if Moulin Rouge! The Musical is any indication, the group behind the theater's rebirth is hoping to live up to that storied history when, after three years, the curtain again rises at the Emerson Colonial this summer. The musical, adapted from the 2001 Baz Luhrman film and directed by Alex Timbers, will run July 10 through Aug. 19 before it heads to Broadway for an already planned engagement.

The world premiere starring Tony winner Karen Olivo is just one of the many productions the Ambassador Theatre Group plans to have in the refurbished space. It reached an agreement with Broadway in Boston to host several touring shows, while it continues conversations with Boston Lyric Opera about staging performances, according to Colonial general manager Erica Lynn Schwartz. The group also reached out to local theater companies about creating new partnerships in the future.

"We can also easily accommodate a comedian or small band. We feel like every type of programming should happen here," Schwartz says.

Three improvements were made on the production end of the theater. The dressing room suite was gutted and replaced with more flexible spaces that will change with each production. Additionally, the old wooden grid was swapped with a steel one and lowered to better accommodate stagehands. (A construction issue with the new grid pushed back the reopening originally scheduled for June.) And the final touch was updating the hemp system that relied on pulleys and sandbags with a double-purchase counterweight system that will better control the lights, scenery and curtain.

But you won't have to peek backstage to see all the changes. The entire orchestra level was redone with wider seats, while the balcony and dress circle feature new railings on the aisles and comfier seat cushions. The former women's lounge was converted to the Orchestra Bar to reduce the crowd crush, while the Ordertorium app will allow guests to skip the line entirely and get pre-show and intermission drinks delivered to their seats. Those looking for an even higher level of service can secure a spot in the Ambassadors Lounge, which includes access to a private room with food, cocktails, a complimentary coat check and a separate bathroom.

"We talk a lot about history-meets-modern," Schwartz says. "We made modern improvements so the building can function in 2018. But we're also keeping the historical beauty of the building and highlighting that as much as we can." / Matt Martinelli

BEHIND THE SCENES

With wood panels, ornate crown molding and mirrors that are more than 100 years old, the Colonial has plenty of spots where you can soak up the beloved theater's history. We learned a little more about what went into restoring some of the features inside the 1,624-seat playhouse.

BOX OFFICE

The ticket counter was lowered to an ADA-compliant height and the glass window separating the customer from the attendant was removed to allow for a more personal interaction. To the right of the counter hangs an old wooden box-office sign touting admission prices for the theater a century ago. "How can you not look at that and think about the fact that's been there for such a long time?" asks Schwartz.

CEILINGS

A team of artisan painters restored the murals and scenes that adorn the Colonial's ceilings in the lobby, auditorium and elsewhere in the theater. They spent months fixing up the wear and tear that had accumulated over the years. "It's stunning how much more saturated the colors are now after they came in and repaired it," Schwartz says. "It's very vibrant."

ONYX TABLE

The famed table, where Rodgers and Hammerstein wrote and upon which Bob Fosse tap-danced, is a centerpiece of the Orchestra Bar room. Now that the space is open to all theatergoers and not only women, the table will be enjoyed by a larger swath of people. "It is a huge nod to American theater, and all that has been in the building, that we're proud to have kept," Schwartz says.

ST-GERMAIN

1 GrandTen just bottled its Wire Works Rosé Gin—a less spicy, more citrusy version of its American-style iteration—that's soaked in City Winery must. The Southie distiller shows off the pink liquor in the Sunset Slip ($10), mixed with a Luxardo cherry syrup.

2 With vodka, fresh fruit and lemon, the Strawberry Fizz ($12) at Backyard Betty's is easy drinking. The refreshing sip with a zesty kick pairs well with cookout faves like wings or burgers, or lighter options such as grilled veggies.

3 The Bowl Cut Blues ($13) blends mezcal, tequila and a strawberry-basil shrub. Grown specifically for the cocktail, the micro-basil garnish may be small but it packs a punch. Hopefully Tip Tap Room bartender Jack Mahoney's botched haircut has grown out.

4 Inspired by one crazy summer in Newport, Rhode Island, Committee's Smash 'n' Dash ($13) features Four Roses bourbon, yellow chartreuse, ginger syrup and grapefruit juice, and is topped with mint, candied ginger and dehydrated lemon.

5 Find the straw among a bunch of pea shoots in this Oak Long Bar + Kitchen cocktail. The Home Grown ($15) is built on tea-steeped Irish Gunpowder gin, while lemon balances the sweetness of a syrup that's made with blanched English peas pureed with honey.

6 Highland Fried references the classic Brooke Shields film with the bubbly-spiked Blue Lagoon ($10), a slightly sweet take on a margarita. Mermaids scale the cocktail rim, and blue curaçao's addition gets some depth from orgeat and falernum.

7 ArtBar's DIY tableside Fire Tonic ($13) arrives with edible flowers and grilled grapefruit floating in tonic water. Guests pour a carafe of butterfly pea blossom-infused gin into the mixture and watch the color change before their eyes.

8 Summer is coming at Lincoln Tavern & Restaurant. The Game of Thrones-inspired Dracarys ($11) taps neighbor Juice Box's blend of dragon fruit, bananas, blueberries and strawberries and the fiery heat of Southie-bred Ghost Tequila.

LITTLE WONDER: A celestial space will replace the Centre Street Cafe.

STARS ALIGN

A SPACE-THEMED DINER IS READY TO LAND IN JAMAICA PLAIN

Little Dipper
669 Centre St., Boston
(617-524-9217)

Restaurateur David Doyle—co-owner of Tres Gatos and Casa Verde—is poised to add another star to his constellation of Jamaica Plain concepts with the July opening of Little Dipper. Doyle teamed up with partners Mari Perez-Alers and Leila Asher as well as chef Robyn McGrath—previously of Sel de la Terre and Ten Tables—to bring this casual-dining endeavor with an outer-space theme to the neighborhood.

In the space formerly occupied by Doyle's Centre Street Cafe, Little Dipper will be a departure from the Italian eatery, with celestial-inspired decor throughout the 30-seat space, including 40-50 model spaceships hanging from the ceiling and specially crafted panels that will open at night to give the illusion of being inside a spaceship.

"We don't want to veer too kitschy," McGrath says. "We do get that this concept is fun and a little bit silly, but we like that. We like the fact that you're going to come in and you're going to smile."

Little Dipper will serve traditional American fare for breakfast, lunch and dinner seven days a week. The breakfast and brunch menu will include options such as a classic egg-and-cheese sandwich served on a homemade English muffin with add-ons like a sausage patty, applewood-smoked bacon, avocado or hash browns, as well as a breakfast bowl made with an acai puree blended with blueberries, bananas and guarana, topped with granola and fresh fruit. The lunch and dinner menus will feature appetizers such as deviled eggs made with smoked chili and chives and entrees like the roasted lemon-brined chicken, pan-seared with Brussels sprouts and served with a Parmesan-herb popover. The bar program will include sangria made with red wine, orange juice, citrus-infused brandy, cinnamon, lemon juice and Angostura bitters, along with an array of New England craft beers, including Zero Gravity's Green State Lager pilsner—a subtle nod to the restaurant's intergalactic interior.

"The menu is really inspired by American cuisine, whether it's mac 'n' cheese, meatloaf or pancakes—it's really very traditional, very comforting," McGrath says. "Then some of the healthier dishes are just about pulling in what's seasonal and what makes sense for this community."

CABINET MAKERS: Cusser's takeout window serves the Rhode Island specialty.

Good Eats: Rhode Trip

Here's a vocab lesson for those not fluent in Rhode Island-ese: A cabinet—like the one found at the new Cusser's Roast Beef & Seafood takeout window at Moon Bar—is a milkshake with rich coffee flavor that transcends translation. Instead of the usual sugar-bomb of Autocrat coffee syrup, co-owner Vincent Vela goes the craft route. The team uses George Howell beans for a cold brew concentrate, then adds vanilla ice cream, whole milk and a vanilla simple syrup. Pair the coffee cabinet with one of Cusser's hot dogs, lobster rolls or other New England classics for a bit of beachy bliss in Back Bay. / Nathan Tavares

GREEK STREAK

More than 4,000 years ago, wine spread from the islands of Crete and Santorini to Greek colonies in the Balkans, Italy and, by 600 B.C., France and Spain. Greece's most noted philosophers and poets regarded wine as a magical substance, and for the first time in history, it became an essential beverage full of ritualistic significance and central to the everyday diet. Given these foundations, it's puzzling that contemporary Greek wines remain so unfamiliar, though if the following three bottles are any indication, perceptions may be about to change. / Sandy Block

SANTO ASSYRTIKO VOLCANIC TERROIR, SANTORINI, 2016

Assyrtiko is Greece's breakout white variety. This bottle is dry, clean and minerally, with soft touches of melon, honeysuckle and Meyer lemon. But it also has a bracing salty aftertaste, making it a great match with any dish involving feta cheese

$24 Whole Foods, South End

ARGYROS ASSYRTIKO, SANTORINI, 2016

This medium-bodied assyrtiko has a lime, apple blossom and peach-like aroma, with hints of bay leaf and mint. On the palate it's soft and creamy, with well-balanced spice. Gentle but crisp and firm, this bottle's an outstanding choice with shrimp or scallops.

$21, Marty's, Newton

MYLONAS SAVATIANO, ATTICA, 2017

Located outside of Athens, this winery produces a savatiano with bright notes of apple and grapefruit. Dry and a bit chalky, this wine also shows traces of herb and vegetal characters. Its prominent fruitiness ups its appeal and it would be a delicious choice for smoked fish.

$15, The Cork Stop, North Andover

Sandy Block is a master of wine and the vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

Q&A
THE GOSPEL TRUTH

Following Page One: Inside the New York Times, documentary filmmaker Kate Novack is turning her lens from the newsroom to the runway with her latest project, The Gospel According to André. For more than four decades, fashion powerhouse André Leon Talley has been a reigning arbiter in high-fashion editorial. We caught up with Novack, a Brookline native, to hear about bringing Talley's life onto the big screen. / Julia Aparicio

WHAT'S THE FOCUS OF THE FILM? It traces André Leon Talley's journey from being a young, somewhat lonely boy in the Jim Crow South to what he calls the chiffon trenches—the front row of high fashion. It's a movie that is about fashion, but I also view his story as a classic American success story, with all of the difficulties and costs that he paid along the way. It hopefully transcends fashion and looks at success in America and the African-American experience.

HOW DID YOU GET THE IDEA? I had been watching him in films for 25 years. He's always larger than life. He's always hilarious, but always as the supporting actor commenting on other people. He, for so many years, was the only one—by that I mean the only African-American man—at that level of fashion. I wanted to make him the protagonist of his own story because I think his story is important. I think he's made it look very easy over the years and I thought that there was value in understanding what it really has taken for him to get to where he got.

WHAT IS YOUR FAVORITE THING THAT YOU LEARNED ABOUT HIM? I didn't know that his idea of luxury is actually much broader and more profound than diamonds and Louis Vuitton trunks—although he loves those things too. For him, I think luxury relates back to this idea of care, whether it's his grandmother baking him biscuits from scratch, or ironing his sheets, or a beautifully kept floor that's been scrubbed or a beautifully sewn couture piece.

PATCHWORK: The Local Fabric art installation showcases the city's 23 neighborhoods.

ON THE WEB

The 100th international Suit Supply store recently opened on Newbury Street. For the staff's tips on summer suits and more info on the new location, go to improper.com.

THE BIG PICTURE

The new glass atrium at 100 Federal St. just got a little more color. Created by the Boston-based Sosolimited, the Local Fabric public art installation functions as an ever-changing digital quilt—weaving together photographs that capture the culture of each of the city's 23 neighborhoods. Viewable from the street, the site-specific piece aims to engage the community and brighten the surrounding urban landscape with patterns and hues inspired by fabric.

"The clothing worn in a city becomes—both literally and figuratively—the fabric of the neighborhood," says Sosolimited creative director Eric Gunther. "We wondered how we could bring that idea full circle and weave the textures of the neighborhood landscape back into evolving, clothing-like patterns."

The piece began with 400 curated photos—highlighting murals in Roxbury, Charlestown row houses and the vibrant street fairs of Chinatown—before incorporating crowd-sourced images. Each composition is generated using software that extracts the photographs' colors and textures to produce constantly evolving images—no two patterns are alike—with a geometric design that also incorporates the angles of the Federal Street building's atrium. Throughout the day the installation cycles through a sequence featuring all of Boston's neighborhoods and it's often refreshed with new photos posted on Instagram and tagged #localfabricboston.

"We want to breathe new life and color into the familiar sites of Boston," Gunther says. "And invite people to explore corners of the city they've never seen before." / Cathryn Haight

FOOT SOLDIER

The latest pairing between PF Flyer and Ball and Buck sees the two Boston-based brands hoping to kick your kicks up a notch. Their PF Flyers x Ball and Buck Center-Lo limited edition sneakers ($150) fuse PF Flyers' military heritage—the company crafted shoes for the armed forces during World War II—with the Back Bay boutique's signature Americana style. "We've included subtle, unmistakable Ball and Buck touches like our canvas and signature camo applied to the side and interior heel cap, which add a level of sophistication to a classic silhouette," says Mark Bollman, Ball and Buck's CEO and founder. Made in Boston, the sleek low-top sneakers pair just as well with business casual chinos as a pair of shorts for off-duty weekend outings. / Nathan Tavares

PSYCHEDELICIOUS

A HARVARD PROFESSOR EXPLORES THE UPTICK IN THE LSD INDUSTRY

How To Change Your Mind* by Michael Pollan
Published by Penguin Press, 414 pages, $28

MIND-EXPANDING THROUGH psychedelics exploded onto the scene like fireworks in the 1960s after the recklessly bold Harvard professor Timothy Leary encouraged students to "turn on, tune in, drop out." His colleague Richard Alpert—who later became the spiritual New Age guru Ram Dass—swam in the same heady drug-soaked waters. But both were fired, and the mystical beauty of LSD and psilocybin fell on hard times.

In his newest book, How To Change Your Mind, Harvard professor Michael Pollan brilliantly follows the recently revived life of magic mushrooms and LSD, discovering their surprisingly practical uses. Scientists, rational though they remain, now have neuroscience on their side as they study and experiment with psychedelics on patients—and sometimes on themselves. They're finding that altered states of consciousness can be helpful for combating depression and for getting people safely, and fearlessly, through their final moments of life. Pollan shows how this unusual experience—spiritual for some—can even help addicts, stretching their sense of self through "awe" to a wider, better perspective. The psychedelic industry is waking up from its slumber as new drug policies allow for more research and even legal use is being debated.

With exquisite balance and self-awareness, Pollan takes four "trips" to learn what this controversial matter he's exploring feels like. What he calls his "travelogue" takes him into that dreamy world of symbols and imagery, where he's shaping feelings and thoughts into a kind of cubism while his ground-gripping ego floats away. Among his psychic adventures: a feeling he's giving birth to his own baby-self!

FROM PAGE 323: "Baby consciousness is so different from adult consciousness as to constitute a mental country of its own, one from which we are expelled sometime early in adolescence. Is there a way back in? The closest we can come to visiting that foreign land as adults may be during the psychedelic journey." ◆

PALM SPRINGS BREAK: Enjoy cocktails at Truss & Twine and lounge by the Rowan's rooftop pool in Coachella Valley

HEAT APPEAL

SOMETHING OLD AND SOMETHING NEW IN OL' BLUE EYES' STOMPING GROUNDS

There's a Palm Springs awakening afoot, as sleepy enclaves with pastel-swathed retirees welcome a hip, younger crowd that goes beyond the annual Coachella set. Once again, old Hollywood's getaway party town is a hot place to be—and not just because of the desert climate.

It starts downtown, where a $400 million-revitalization project ushered in shiny new buildings anchored by a newly planted Kimpton Hotels property. The seven-month-old Rowan boasts two restaurants, two bars and 153 modern rooms with midcentury furniture and views of the San Jacinto Mountains.

Look through the west-facing floor-to-ceiling windows to spot the Palm Springs Art Museum. The chief curator has been scouring LA galleries since the '70s to build a contemporary collection that includes Diane Arbus, Alexander Calder, Marc Chagall, Donald Judd and Andy Warhol, which the museum is currently tapping as it mounts an exhibition to celebrate its 80th anniversary.

Art isn't the only thing to ogle out here. Take in some natural beauty during a ride on the Palm Springs Aerial Tramway. Nestled into the mountains a few miles from town, the tram's rotating 80-person cars cruise a staggering 8,500-foot ascent at 22 miles per hour. If you can stomach the 10-minute trip, a welcome temperature drop of at least 20 degrees awaits, as do a few easy hikes that offer views of a miniscule-looking windmill farm. Keep an eye out for wildlife such as chickadees and the endangered mountain yellow-legged frog as the subtle scents of butterscotch and vanilla breeze by from the Jeffrey pines. The more agile can plan a half-day adventure to the summit, where the lights of both LA and Las Vegas beckon.

Of course, the height-averse can get a different view—and still cool off—back at the Rowan. The seven-story hotel is home to the city's only rooftop pool. Beginning at 10 am, High Bar serves date-infused Old-Fashioneds and by-request frozen Aperol spritzes, and sunbathers can also drink in views of the airport tower while lounging in cabanas.

Luckily, you don't have to travel far to find a go-to dinner spot. The rooftop shares space with 4 Saint's clusters of rattan pendants and light leather banquettes. Settle in to nosh on thick cuts of hamachi crudo flown in from Japan, served with yuzu sauce and tangerines, and the deliciously flaky John Dory en croûte that makes its way from New Zealand. Trust your server's recommendations and wine pairings and you can't go wrong, but it's worth a return trip to sample something else—or at the very least, convince your fellow diners to share a few bites of their own selections.

Hit the ground running for some liquid dessert. The industrial-chic Truss & Twine orients its menu around historic cocktail eras, like Prohibition and the "Dark Ages," which has the expert staff upgrading the not-so-great drinks of the '80s and '90s: a Vietnamese coffee-infused gin stars in a White Russian, Cosmopolitans are made with a housemade lime cordial that has a touch of ginger, and the Long Island iced tea actually tastes like tea. Bootlegger Tiki, a few short blocks away, should be the final place to visit: Happy hour is from midnight till 2. This tiny Tiki bar is set in the footprint of the third location of Don the Beachcomber, the godfather of tropical tipples. Grab one of six seats at the red-lit bar lined with jars of dehydrated fruit slices, herbs, flowers and crazy straws, which end up in punnily named drinks like Spike Tyson and (Straw)Barry White.

The time traveling continues as you do some downtown shopping. The Shops at 1345 is home to a collective of purveyors and their goods, from Soukie Modern's Moroccan rugs and butterfly chairs to the Lindy's brass napkin rings, malachite bowls and other antique trinkets that beg for a spot in your already-jampacked suitcase. Just down the street, the Frippery's rainbow racks of vintage kaftans, bustiers and other scores are straight out of a Slim Aarons photograph.

For vintage of a different kind, head to the Ingleside Inn. The onetime estate of an early 20th-century automobile heiress wrapped up a top-to-bottom renovation of its 30 rooms this spring. The original parquet floors remain in the former library, the sole spot where one previous owner, Ruth Hardy, allowed guests to drink as she'd take notes on their favorite Scotch, while also keeping an eye on their alcohol intake to determine if they'd be welcomed back. Not to worry—these days, staff will whisk a martini service straight to your doorstep between 4 and 6 pm.

The drinks have always flown at Melvyn's, the inn's New York supper club-inspired restaurant that opened in 1975. Many of the charming, tuxedoed wait staff have been there from the start and can tell you about Frank Sinatra's regular visits to the joint—along with the likes of Liberace, Lucille Ball and Bob Hope, as seen in the black-and-white photographs on the walls. The blue-eyed crooner is no longer barging into the kitchen to cook his own steak just right, but you can order a tableside-prepared dish made to his liking, and he's well alive during the Casablanca Lounge's nightly entertainment and Sunday jam sessions, which fill the small dance floor with young and old alike.

After a complimentary breakfast in the morning, dry out by the pool. Peruse a small library of Danielle Steele novels and later mosey to the lawn for a friendly round of croquet. The good news: It's easy to squeeze in maximum sun time, as the airport's just 10 minutes away. The downside: Eventually, you'll fly, fly away. ◆

BAB KOREAN BISTRO BRINGS A SLICK VERSION OF KOREAN TO BROOKLINE

As Boston weather turns hot and sultry, your thoughts may roam to classic summertime foods like fried clams and steamed Maine lobster. While I often dream of New England clam boils loaded with littlenecks, chourico and linguica, and of August's local corn and tomatoes, I'm also fascinated by hot-weather traditions in other cuisines. One of those is naeng myeon, the cold-but-spicy noodle dish beloved by Koreans in the summer. That happens to be a specialty of Bab Korean Bistro, a shiny new spot that opened near Coolidge Corner.

Cold and spicy may strike some American palates as odd, but when the mercury climbs many traditions favor cool foods with sweat-inducing chilies, like Thai som tum, Sichuan cold noodles and Peruvian ceviche. At Bab, naeng myeon features a tangle of skinny, delightfully chewy noodles made of buckwheat flour served in a frigid broth. The mild one, mul ($13), can be punched up with dribbles of hot mustard and rice vinegar, while the spicier bibim ($14) is plenty fierce as is. The latter features a soft-boiled egg, thick squares of tender beef brisket, slices of cucumber and apple and a huge dollop of a fiery sauce of chili paste, aromatics, soy sauce, vinegar and sugar. The interplay of sensations here is beguiling: savory vs. tangy vs. sweet; capsaicin fire battling the icy broth; the tender textures of egg and beef and vegetables contrasted with those insistently chewy noodles.

One expects a place with rice in its name to do decent versions of bibimbap, and Bab does not disappoint. Haemul dolsot bibimbap ($15) is the standout, a mix of squid, shrimp and clams tossed with carrot, zucchini, shiitakes and iceberg lettuce in a soy-based sauce; let the rice get crisp, chewy and caramelized in the hot stone pot before stirring. Korean barbecue offerings lack the fun of tableside grilling, but options like moksal ($19), grill-charred slices of pork in a savory, fiery marinade, are tasty if somewhat meager in portion. Adventurous diners should sample dwaeji sundae gukbab ($15), a meal-size soup with thin slices of pork, chunks of dark, umami-rich blood sausage and twists of pork intestines into which you dump rice, scallion greens and as much chili paste as your heat tolerance allows. Your enjoyment of this dish will probably correlate to your love of chitterlings, which here carry a faint barnyard whiff.

One needn't love offal to graze happily on Bab's smaller dishes, like the simple, delectable casserole that is corn cheese ($6), corn kernels and diced sweet pepper in a mayo-based dressing, topped with shredded mozzarella. Tteok bokki with bulgogi ($11) is a fine rendition of the ubiquitous Korean snack-bar food, a plate of tubular, chewy rice dumplings tossed with springy fish cakes, boiled eggs and scallions in a vivid gochujang sauce, topped with a pile of grilled marinated rib-eye. Fried mandu ($9) are beef turnovers with a crunchy, skillful fry job and a side of dipping sauce. Bun—round, fluffy, steamed wheat flatbread that's wrapped taco-like around various fillings (typically a protein, cucumber or lettuce and a sweet sauce) and served in pairs—are terrific, notably the galbi (beef short rib, $10) and mushroom ($9). Jeon, a big savory pancake crisply browned and served with a dark, soy-based dipping sauce, is a tremendous shareable plate, especially the haemul pa version ($10) loaded with scallions and bits of seafood. The simple stir-fry that is mushroom bokkeum ($11) with wood ears is tasty enough, but a little skimpy for the price. Plates of fried chicken ($15-$16) with three sauce options are generously sized; we enjoyed the sweet, lightly-fiery yangnyeom ($15) and the also-sweet, soy-flavored ganjang ($15). Be warned: These are not the crisp, twice-fried chicken parts found at Korean fried-chicken specialty joints, but a pile of crunchy chicken nuggets, soggy in spots from oversaucing.

Every meal here begins with a complimentary four-dish serving of modest, not-extraordinary banchan, typically kimchis of cabbage and daikon and salads of broccoli and soybean sprouts, and ends with the gift of a cunning little cornmeal fritter in a sticky honey glaze. You might pine for a cold beer or sake with this food, but Bab offers only bottled sweetened teas, flavored seltzers, fruit juices and American sodas ($2-$3). We were grateful for complimentary jasmine tea, served in a serious-looking, heavy iron teapot.

The room is a cheery 40 seats, spare and crisp with friendly service that generally hits its marks, though it can get a little harried at the busiest hours. Bab appears to be the latest in a long line of Northeast Asian restaurants in Coolidge Corner: a little sleeker and pricier than its rougher competitors to the north in Allston, bringing a useful mix of familiar standbys leavened with a handful of traditional, lesser-seen dishes, and delivering on flavors pretty consistently, but on value more haphazardly. Still, its splendid rendition of that chilling-hot naeng myeon might be reason enough to visit in the coming dog days of summer. ◆

Q: WHAT WOULD YOU SUGGEST TO GET RID OF CELLULITE?

A: Cellulite is normal fat which causes a "crater" effect because it is trapped beneath the surface of the skin. This trapped fat pushes against connective tissue, septa, causing the skin above it to pucker. Cellulite is more common in women and is commonly found on the thighs and buttocks, but can appear anywhere.

The most effective treatment for stubborn cellulite that we have found is RF (Radio Frequency) body contouring. The radio waves break down the fat, effectively melting the fat, to a liquid state. This allows the fat to escape so it can be purged from your body, thus reducing, or eliminating, cellulite.

RF treatments can be done in the summer, even if you have a tan. The treatments are comfortable and there is no downtime. Break out your swimming suits and shorts without worrying about cellulite!

INCREDIBUMMER

THE EXCEPTIONAL IS ORDINARY IN PIXAR'S DISAPPOINTING SEQUEL TO THE INCREDIBLES

"When everyone's super, no one will be."

This line from Brad Bird's The Incredibles perfectly encapsulates the writer/director's computer-animated adventure. It's his celebration of exceptionalism that provides the beating heart of his original. If only Bird's long-awaited Incredibles 2 was as exceptional as its predecessor. Rather than conjuring a satisfying return, Bird replaced the boundless creativity of his 2004 masterwork with a predictable plot that barely coasts on autopilot, while offering little of the warmth or relatable family dynamic that audiences fell in love with the first time around.

The Incredibles managed to pave its own magical way, four years before the Marvel Cinematic Universe began to take shape with the first Iron Man film. But during the past decade, superheroes on cinema screens have become a dime a dozen, driven mainly by Disney and the ever-expanding MCU, which will soon span 20 films. And with this glut of comic book-inspired movies, it takes a lot to remain, well, super.

Incredibles 2 isn't terrible, but viewed through the prism of the unparalleled pedigree of Pixar's best, being good simply isn't good enough—something the 60-year-old Bird probably knows better than almost anyone. A natural-born filmmaker, Bird is exceptional himself. During a tour of Walt Disney Studios at age 11, he determined he'd become an animator. By the time he was 14, the Montana native was being mentored by Milt Kahl, one of Disney's legendary Nine Old Men. Upon graduating from high school, Bird was awarded a Disney scholarship to the California Institute of the Arts, where he forged relationships with artists whom he would later work with at Pixar.

After serving as a consultant for the first eight seasons of TV's The Simpsons, Bird wrote and directed The Incredibles, which in turn led to 2007's Ratatouille. Both films won Oscars for Best Animated Feature, while also earning Bird nominations for his screenplays. Since he had nearly 14 years to come up with a worthy follow-up to The Incredibles, expectations were high that he would once again soar to his earlier heights. Instead, we're now witnessing his fall to Earth.

Bird replaced the boundless creativity of his 2004 masterwork with a predictable plot.

Picking up moments before the conclusion of the first film, Incredibles 2 finds the Parr family—Bob/Mr. Incredible (once again voiced by Craig T. Nelson), his wife Helen/Elastigirl (the returning Holly Hunter), sad-eyed teen daughter Violet (This American Life's Sarah Vowell, also returning), speedy tween son Dash (Huckleberry Milner, replacing the now-25-year-old Spencer Fox) and adorable infant Jack-Jack—still being forced to keep their powers under wraps due to Watchmen-inspired anti-superhero legislation. But rather than Mr. Incredible, this time it's Helen who slips on her Elastigirl tights in a bid to relegitimize crime fighting, while Bob becomes a stay-at-home dad who finally sees what Helen was up against while he spent years trying to conform to life as an insurance claim adjuster.

While Bob struggles to understand why Violet is making herself more invisible than ever, he also attempts to aid Dash with his equally puzzling New Math homework. Ironically, Jack-Jack begins to excel at multiplication—of himself, that is—and dividing into numerous copies is just one of his emerging powers that was briefly teased during the first film's climactic showdown with the villainous Syndrome.

An uncanny prediction of today's fan culture, Syndrome allowed his boyhood enthusiasm for Mr. Incredible to twist into something toxic. He's a nerd who grew up loving something so much he vowed to destroy it when it didn't live up to his impossible expectations. By comparison, Screenslaver—the Big Bad who ensnares Elastigirl in this sequel's muddled plot machinations—is little more than a clever name in search of a character. There's more to the movie than that, of course—far too much more. It's as if Bird had a decade-and-a-half worth of ideas that he couldn't bear to pare down, so he crammed them all into one film.

Jack-Jack's blossoming abilities might propel crowd-pleasing set pieces that provide this movie's best comic moments, but his mother proves a less compelling protagonist than her husband as she stretches herself, literally and figuratively. If Bird had simply narrowed his focus to the difficulties parents face while juggling family and career, he might have located the emotional center that remains key to Pixar's best work. As returning super-suit designer, the pint-sized fashionista Edna Mode (voiced by Bird) observes, "Done properly, parenting is a heroic act."

Family audiences can hardly argue with that. They deserve better. ◆

NEWTON NATIVE FINDS NATURAL VOCAL BLEND IN ALL-STAR ACOUSTIC TRIO

"WE LIKE TO JOKE THAT WHEN you're touring in a band with all women, you tend to have less deli meat [backstage]," Aoife O'Donovan says of her collaboration with Sara Watkins and Sarah Jarosz. "The fact that we're all women is not really a huge part of it necessarily for me. It's just really nice to be on tour with your friends."

The trio's name "I'm With Her" probably sounds familiar, though the folk-circuit peers who first sang together at the 2014 Telluride Bluegrass Festival adopted it after an early tour—more than a year before Hillary Clinton used the same tag as a slogan for her 2016 presidential campaign.

"There are way worse associations that one could have had," O'Donovan says of the moniker. "It's for feelings of camaraderie and the sense that we're all in this together. ... If there are people who see the name I'm With Her and they're immediately turned off, I'm sorry for them and hope they give it a chance."

Rightly so, those who dismiss the band based on its name are losing out, depriving themselves of the sweet harmonic synergy of a supergroup that blends Americana, bluegrass and both traditional and contemporary folk.

After growing up around Irish music, Newton native O'Donovan, 35, co-founded the progressive string band Crooked Still and recorded with artists from cellist Yo-Yo Ma to jazz trumpeter Dave Douglas. Watkins, 37, launched bluegrass-pop pioneers Nickel Creek with her brother Sean and mandolinist Chris Thile and toured with folk-rockers the Decemberists. And the 27-year-old Jarosz—who graduated from New England Conservatory in 2013, exactly a decade after O'Donovan—became a Grammy-winning solo artist.

But when the three singers rehearsed backstage for their impromptu debut at Telluride, O'Donovan says, "It was definitely a pinch-me moment. We knew that we had to continue it."

Part of that connection was instinctual. "It just felt great to have that immediate ease of a blend and ease of filling [space] without saying who was going to do what," she says. "Everybody falls into their natural roles. And that's really special."

"It was definitely a pinch-me moment. We knew that we had to continue it."

The chemistry continued through the recording of their February debut See You Around, and a new tour is bookended by dates at North Truro's Payomet Performing Arts Center on July 6 and 16 and includes a July 8 stop at Prescott Park in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and a July 15 set at Greenfield's Green River Festival.

Far from a festival song swap, See You Around presents a winsome set of tunes with shared writing credits, plus a cover of Gillian Welch's "Hundred Miles."

"We were wary of having it be just another project where everybody sings a song and everybody else backs up the other person," O'Donovan says.

In addition to their traded vocals and guitars, Watkins plays fiddle and ukulele, Jarosz mixes mandolin and banjo, and O'Donovan adds keyboards to the album, as does co-producer Ethan Johns. That multi-instrumental weave makes the trio sound full in a live setting, whether huddled around a single microphone or separately amplified to accommodate electric guitars.

Songs on See You Around revolve around themes of travel and loneliness, which O'Donovan says was unintentional if understandable: "It's kind of moving on and moving past stuff, physically traveling and emotionally traveling, and it makes sense when you look at how we spend our lives."

In fact, after writing in Los Angeles and Vermont, the group flew to England to record at Peter Gabriel's Real World Studios, where on the first day they spotted Gabriel walking through the house with Sting. "I love making records in isolation," O'Donovan says. "We were virtually sequestered in an old farmhouse with very little outside influence. ... The first weekend we were, 'We have to get out of here,' and we took the train to London, which was really fun. But we'd come back and hunker down and get work done."

Music was always a social experience for the daughter of Brian O'Donovan, producer/host of A Celtic Sojourn on WGBH radio. "When I was a kid, I would never want to go to bed when my parents were having music parties," she says. "I used to love the romantic idea of staying up all night and singing songs." ◆

IN THE LONG RUN

HOW TO BE A REAL WINNER ON THE RACING CIRCUIT

YOU PROBABLY HAVE A FRIEND WHO'S A dating chameleon, someone whose passions and pastimes morph to reflect those of their latest squeeze. You run into a buddy you haven't seen in a while, and he's carrying roller skates and flaunting a bunch of new tattoos.

"Yeah, I'm pretty into roller derby these days," he says. You gently ask whether that isn't typically, you know, a sport for women, and he tells you that his new girlfriend Siren is into it and she convinced the team to let him be the mascot. Ironically, duh. Then the next time you see him, you find out he and Siren broke up but now he's really into wearing hats. Coincidentally, his new girlfriend is a milliner.

I'm confident that I'm not like that. When I met my wife, Heather, she was training for the Boston Marathon. She's big into running, and never did it occur to me that I should join her in that sick hobby. I've got stuff to do, like sleep in late. Sure, some parts of marathon culture are appealing, like the carbo-loading and slathering yourself in Vaseline—but the running I could do without.

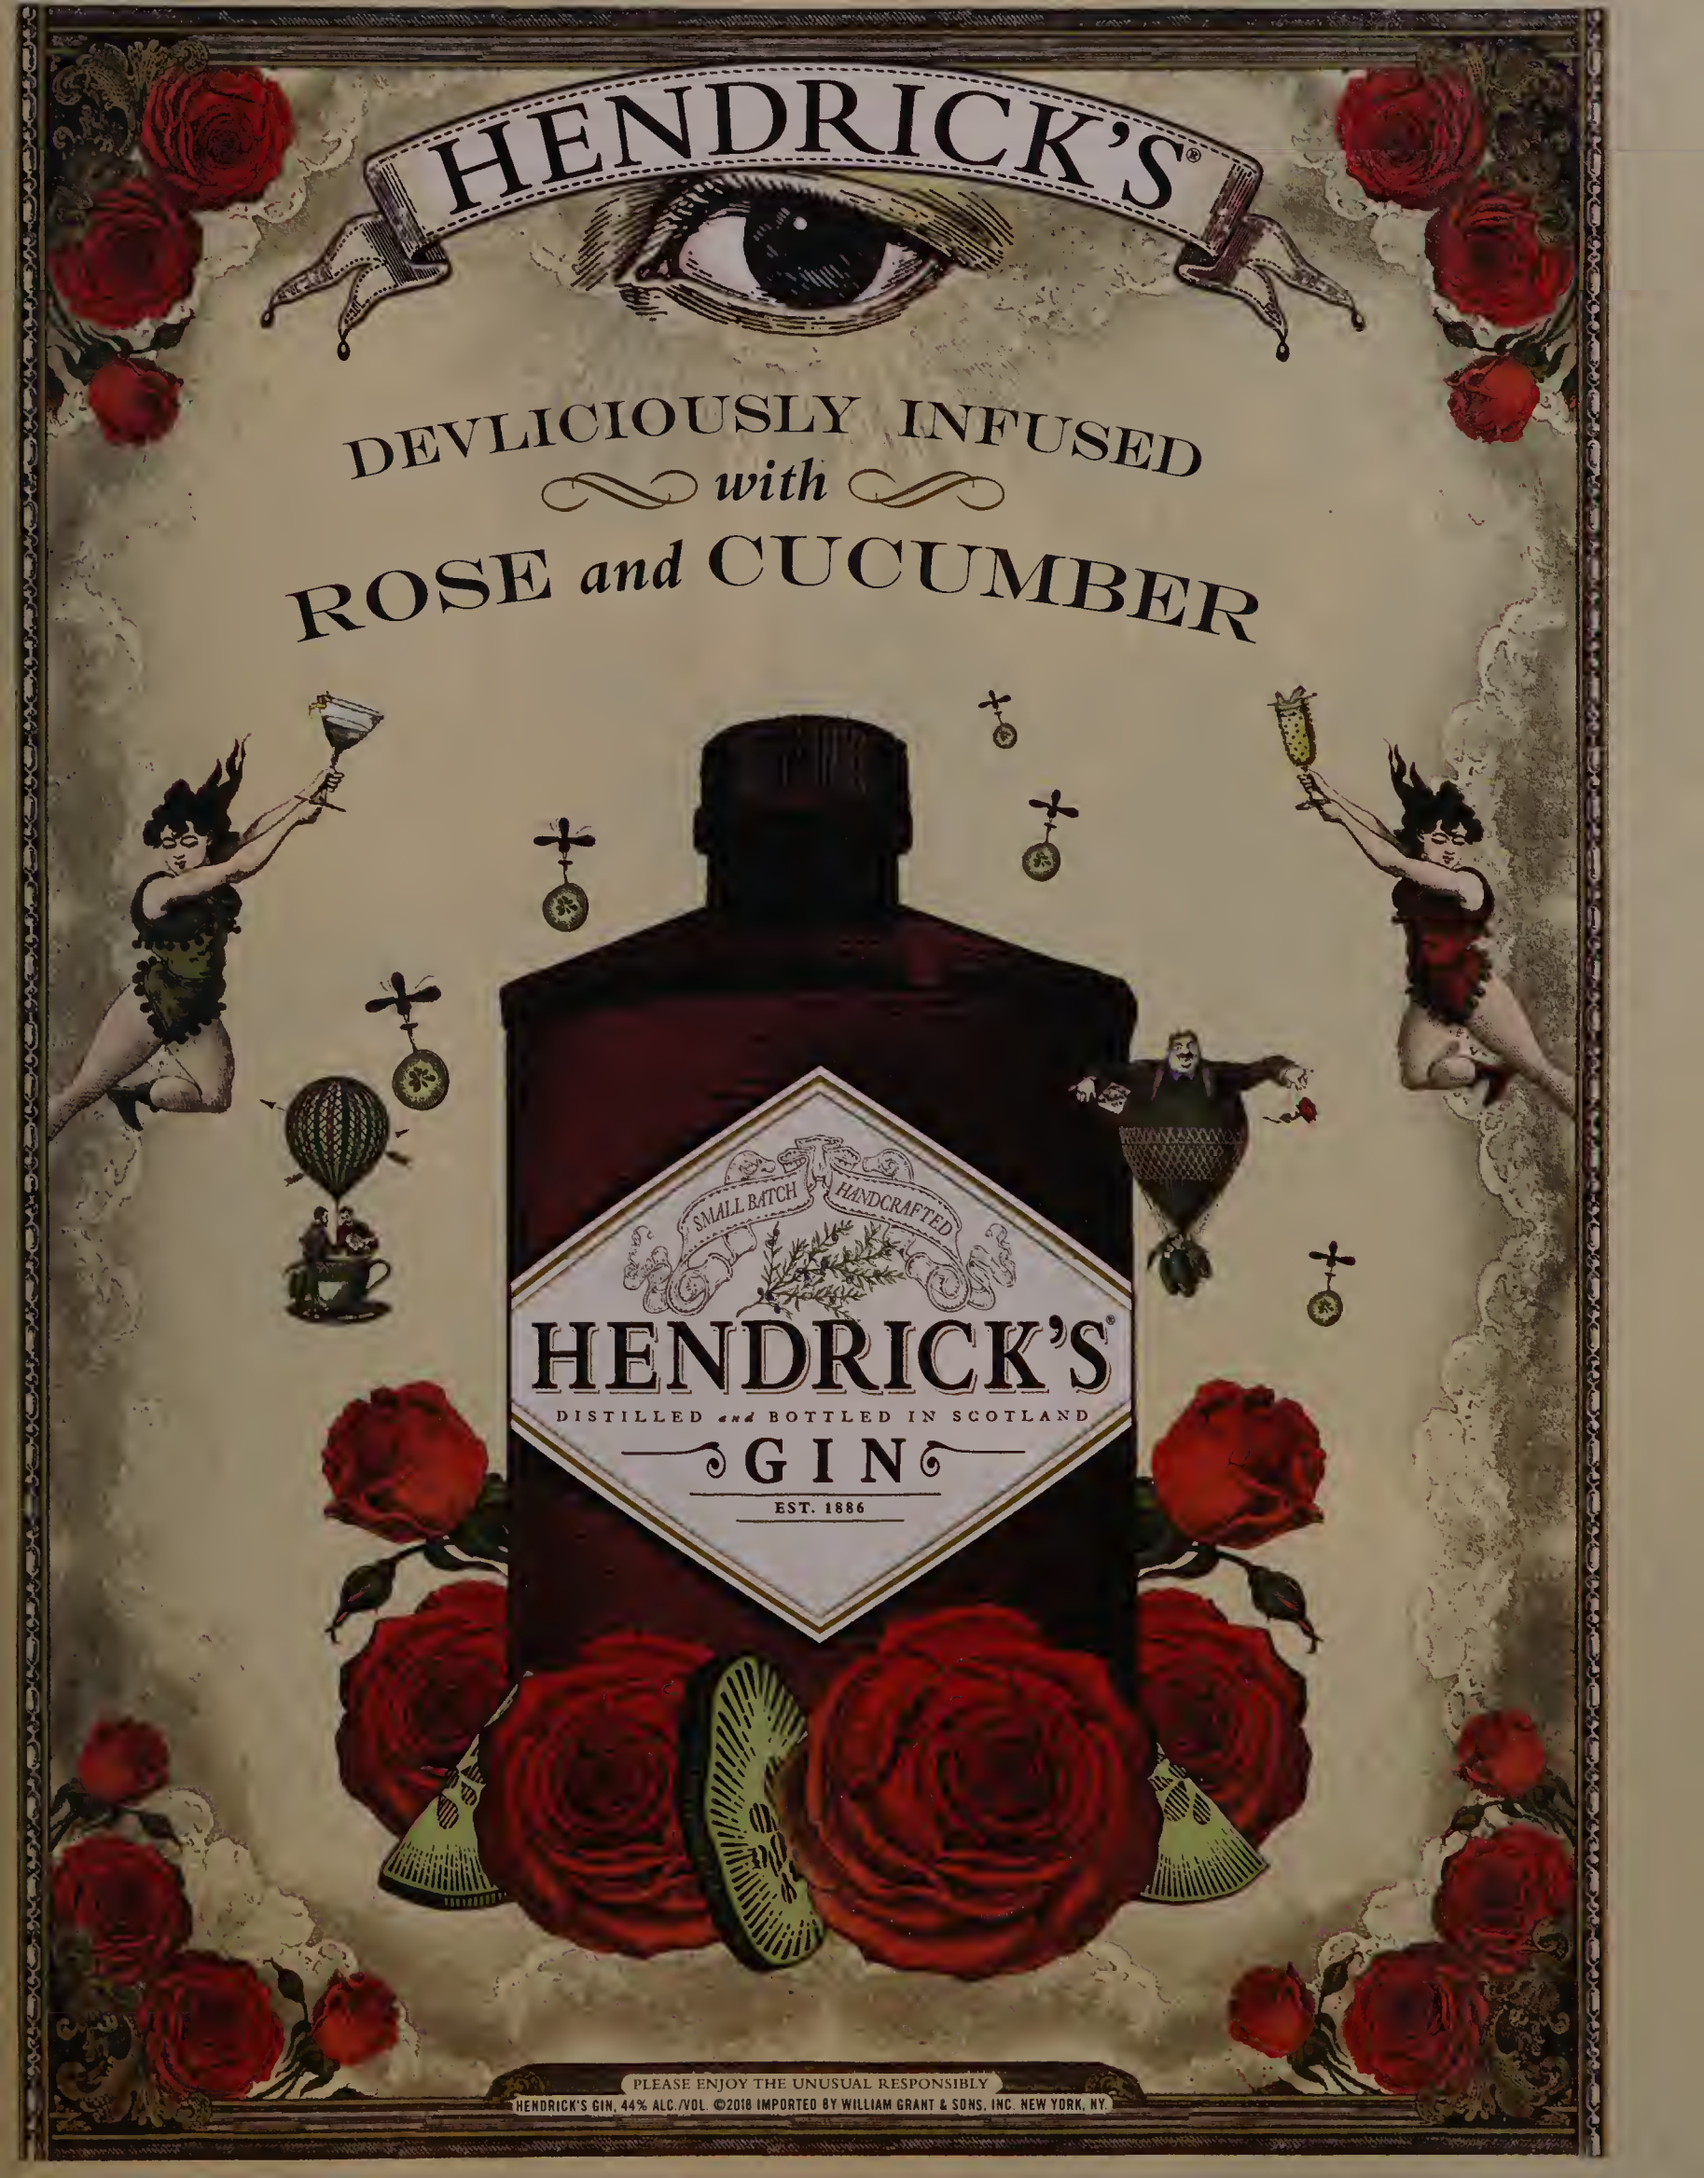
At some point that changed. Apparently, the process happened gradually, such that I was unaware of my metamorphosis, but I can precisely date the moment of my self-awakening. I was inside a port-a-potty at dawn, a half-hour before a 5K race. A freezing wind was kicking outside, and I realized I was taking my time with the hand sanitizer in order to extend my visit in the cozy plastic stinkhouse. When you find yourself relishing your time inside a port-a-potty, you really ought to question what you're doing with your life. Another race was held in such a downpour that I ran it while wearing a skin-tight trash bag, because I grabbed a kitchen bag rather than a 50-gallon black one. I looked like an escaped Gollum. This is fun?

I guess so, because I've now run a bunch of 5Ks. Every race starts the same way, by which I mean I wake up in the morning and think about how great it would be to not run the race. But then Heather gets dressed and I feel guilty. The next thing I know, I'm trying to drink a small cup of Gatorade without breaking stride, which results in half of it going down my shirt and the other half aspirating into my lungs. Then, a mile later, the two molecules of liquid I managed to swallow have migrated directly to my bladder and I start wondering whether I'll cross the finish line looking like the Uta Pippig of 5Ks. Also, I've paid to do this.

I usually do OK in my age group, but I'd figured that when I turned 40 I'd automatically start placing, since my new cohort might include near-50-year-olds. But here's the problem: As you get older, the 5K crowd self-selects for psycho runners and fitness freaks. Most of the guys in their 30s were, like me, generally not taking this whole thing too seriously. Then you turn the corner into the 40s and all of a sudden it's not a bunch of hungover fat guys sweating out last night's Bud Lights. It's dudes wearing flimsy short-shorts, energy-gel bandoliers and nipple Band-Aids.

You see a guy dressed like that and you just hope he's not in your age group. Most of my pre-race prep consists of silently guessing everyone else's age so I can figure out who to undermine. Like, one guy might have a tribal tattoo that he definitely got in Cancun during Spring Break '95, thus he's a little older. But that other guy with the Blink-182 T-shirt and subtle flecks of gray in his goatee? I'm gonna flat-tire him on the way out of the gate, really psyche him out.

Most of the guys in their 30s were, like me, generally not taking this whole thing too seriously.



Of course, sometimes you misjudge. Toward the end of one race, I saw a guy ahead of me who looked like he might be my age. So I pushed hard, gave it everything I had and passed him right at the end. Just beyond the finish line, as I was gasping like a fresh-caught flounder, another guy approached him and said, "Hey, how old are you?" (It is socially acceptable for adults to go around asking each other their ages for 15 minutes after a 5K race. It's like a new kindergarten class on the first day. "You're 45 and a half? I'm 39 but my birthday's next month. So I can say I'm 40.") The dude I just ruthlessly smoked by three seconds replied: "I'm 65." So that made me feel good. So did the announcement for overall male winner, which turned out to be a 10-year-old wearing a pink cast. At least it was on his arm.

In that race, Heather came in second overall for women, out of 534 entries. She's a runner. Maybe I'm still not, but mark my words: My times will get lower. My shorts will get higher. But I'll be a gracious competitor and even share my nipple Band-Aids. As long as you're not in my age group. ◆

SOROFF/ON

ALY RAISMAN

OLYMPIC GOLD MEDAL GYMNAST AND SOCIAL ACTIVIST ALY RAISMAN, 24, was born and raised in Needham and graduated from Needham High School. She earned six medals during the 2012 and 2016 Games, becoming the second-most decorated American gymnast in Olympic history. She appeared on Dancing with the Stars, published her memoir Fierce and in the past year has become one of the leading voices in the #MeToo movement. She currently has a clothing line in collaboration with Life is Good, recently partnered with Darkness to Light—the country's largest child abuse advocacy organization—and will be receiving the Arthur Ashe Courage Award alongside other abuse survivors at the ESPY Awards in July. She lives in the Boston area.

JONATHAN SOROFF: The last time we spoke, you were a young Olympic hopeful. A lot has changed since then. What's most different about you?

ALY RAISMAN: It's hard to pick one thing. I guess I'd say I never expected my life to be what it is now. As a little girl, I always dreamed of going to the Olympics, but I never expected that so many people watched them, or that so many people would know who I am. Every day, if I'm at the airport, or getting coffee, or at the market, people come up to me. It's very cool, and I'm humbled and honored to be in that position, but I didn't anticipate it.

JS: Do you feel like you're one of the voices of your generation?

AR: It's such an important time right now, and the #MeToo movement is so needed, so I feel strongly that it's crucial to support anyone who shares their story. And I mean with whatever they're struggling with. Whether it's abuse or bullying or whatever, I feel like our society is now listening to people and believing people. We've come a long way—although we have so much further to go—but I like people supporting one another. I love that people are sharing their stories and other people are listening. Everyone is battling something. Everyone's a survivor of something. I feel grateful that I'm being listened to and I'm being heard, because I've met so many people who have said, "I spoke up but nobody listened." I guess I feel that pressure to speak up for them. I feel a great responsibility.

JS: Do you think a $500 million settlement [in the Larry Nassar case] does anything? Can money assuage the pain and suffering or repair the damage done?

AR: The most important thing for these organizations is to take accountability and listen to the survivors, hear them out. And not one organization has done that. But when you file a lawsuit, you're able to get information and data that you otherwise wouldn't. The reason I personally decided to file a lawsuit is because there hasn't been a full, independent investigation. I want the answers. And in certain respects, lawsuits are useful in doing that. The fact that there are still people working in these organizations when problems were reported so long ago is really frustrating, and it's what keeps me up at night. I would love to be a part of USA Gymnastics and helping them create change, but I can't do that if they're not willing to sit down and talk with me.

JS: Is all of the media attention tiresome?

AR: It is exhausting and traumatizing. I'm constantly reliving my abuse, and the last couple of months were extra-draining. I first spoke up back in August and I came forward with my story in November. I was so sick and so nervous. I don't know if people understand how hard it is to do that. I could hold it together in court or whatever, but then I could barely hold my head up afterward. In the past few months, I've barely worked out, which for someone who loves working out, that's saying a lot. But the exhaustion is incredible, especially because you're dealing with a serious issue and you always have to be on. I understand that when I speak, I'm not just speaking for myself. I'm speaking for anyone who suffered this and doesn't have a voice, and I take that very seriously. I want people to know that I have the best intentions, and with the media, you can't really control what they're going to print or how it will come across. You can be misquoted. All of that said, in the past few months, I've been home more. I've been focusing on taking care of myself with acupuncture, therapy, meditating, using essential oils to calm myself. I know this problem isn't going to be fixed overnight. So I have to take care of myself. It's OK to ask for help.

JS: Is there one thing you'd go back and do differently?
AR: Of course, I wish I knew what was happening when I was younger. I had no idea that I was being abused because he was a doctor. I was very uncomfortable with him, and I thought he was very weird. But I thought that because he was a doctor, I almost felt guilty for thinking badly of him. I wish I'd realized that it's important to speak up, even if you're unsure, when someone's making you feel uncomfortable. But I don't want to look back with any regrets, because everything has led me to where I am now.

JS: Would you ever let your child compete in the Olympics or as an elite athlete?
AR: Only if USA Gymnastics and the U.S. Olympic Committee were willing to work with us and make changes and take a hard look at what's gone on. They've been silent. And it's not just in gymnastics but other sports. They're ignoring this problem. But if they were willing to make a change—which obviously the people in charge don't care—I would. Those people need to be gone, and the problem needs to be fixed from the top down to the level when a 4-year-old starts playing a sport. I've partnered with Darkness to Light, which is a two-hour course I recommend to everyone. It's the adult's job to protect children, and they all need to be educated. I'd like the course to be mandated in every single sport, with everyone involved. It can save a child's life.

JS: Three adjectives that best describe you?
AR: It depends on the time period in my life. The past few months, it's been serious, strong and tired. But now I'd also say happy, calm and hopeful. I feel happier than I did a few months ago.

JS: What gymnastic ability have you lost since you were competing?
AR: Oh, god. The thing about gymnastics is it's not one of those things where you can just take off a few months, jump back in and do a floor routine. It takes a long time to get to that point, training six days a week. If I went into the gym, I couldn't do nearly close to what I used to do. It would actually be very dangerous. If I were to try a double-back, I don't even want to know what would happen. So I've lost a lot of skills. I'm sure if I just tried swinging on the bar, my shoulder would hurt and I'd have rips all over my hands. But I feel like what I'm doing right now is more important.

JS: Do you still have a gymnastic move that you bust out as a party trick?
AR: No, I've never done that. I'm so not like that. I never bring my Olympic medals anywhere. I never do gymnastics anywhere. I feel like my whole life, I was known as Aly the Gymnast, so I like to just be Aly. I'm totally uncomfortable doing that. People know I do gymnastics. Why can't I just be me?

JS: Favorite talk show experience?
AR: I'm going to say Hoda Kotb [The Today Show]. She's so nice, so understanding, so respectful. She's a very warm person. You can tell she really cares and wants to do right by you. I really enjoyed that.

JS: How does Dancing with the Stars compare to training for the Olympics?
AR: It doesn't. I loved the experience. It's challenging, learning the dance steps—and it's exhausting. You're dancing in heels. It's also really nerve-wracking to do something outside of your comfort zone on national television, with only one shot to do it. But the level of precision is different, and it's different in general. Gymnastics is so much scarier. You're on a 4-inch wide beam, 4 feet in the air. The pressure of competing in the Olympics was intense. Dancing with the Stars was more fun.

JS: Thing that bugs you about pictures of yourself?
AR: [Laughs.] I've learned to stay off the internet as much as I can. I've also been trying to take more of a break from social media. I would say that when you're more in the limelight, you notice more things about yourself than you would otherwise. I tend to pick myself apart more in a photo than I would in the mirror at home, so I've learned not to do that to myself. It's not what's important in life. Obviously, I'm human, but I just try to convince myself that no one's looking at me the way I look at myself.

JS: So you're very young, but you've been through a lot. How do you want to be remembered ultimately?
AR: I would like to be remembered for standing up for the right thing. It's always more important to do the right thing than to win medals. I'd like to change this generation and the next generation so that by the time I have kids, everyone will be educated, so a child never, ever has to say the words, "Me, too." ◆

2018 BOSTON'S BEST

THE POPULATION IS GROWING. THE CRANES ARE RISING. THERE IS NO DOUBT: BOSTON IS BOOMING.

And yet, it's not the numbers that make city living so desirable these days. It's the people—and the places where we eat, drink, shop, workout and get all dolled up. For the 27th consecutive year, The Improper set out to decide which of those places that make our city great were the best of the bunch. We started on a cold March night, under threat of a major snowstorm, when a couple dozen judges gathered at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston. With suggestions in hand from arts bigwigs, chefs, fashion trendsetters and more, the staff and readers weighed in with their own additional picks. And now, amid a string of blazing hot days, we present a list of 213 winners that are truly the best.

BAGELS

Better Bagels

Seaport office workers have seen their breakfast prospects greatly improved by the first brick-and-mortar location of Better Bagels, whose perfectly calibrated carb wheels—a little toothy on the outside, soft on the inside—may finally quiet our sneering New York pals. We still look forward to pop-up appearances at restaurants such as Coppa, where inventive schmears, like avocado-chili spread and whipped butter with bottarga, always bait long lines of early risers. Better? Nah. They're the best.

83A Seaport Blvd., Boston. betterbagelsboston.com

BANH MI

Banh Mi Ba Le

While even a middling version of Vietnam's brilliant street-food sandwich can be fantastic cheap eating, you shouldn't settle for less when this Savin Hill bakery is in easy striking distance. Housemade French baguettes with an extra-flaky and crunchy crust elevate this rendition above its many fine neighboring competitors. Whether you fill it with grilled beef or shredded pork, we defy you to find a better lunch for $4.50 anywhere in the city.

1052 Dorchester Ave., Boston (617-265-7171)

BARTENDER

Amanda Saladino at The Hawthorne

Jackson Cannon's classy Kenmore Square speakeasy boasts an abundance of bartenders with the essential combination of technical chops and frictionless hospitality that characterizes the best craft cocktail bars. Saladino is a star among stars here, a blur of compact motion and economical energy who somehow manages to make each customer feel personally attended to and cared for. After nearly seven years in business, the Hawthorne is still the real deal, and Saladino is its paragon.

BRAZILIAN

Tudo Na Brasa

The great Brazilian tradition of churrasco finds a modest, lively outlet in this downtown Woburn spot that's also known as Taste of Brazil. Beyond the staggering variety in charcoal-grilled cuts of beef, pork, lamb, chicken, offal and sausages, there are also well-stocked hot and cold buffets, excellent sweets like pudim de leite (Brazilian-style flan) and a full bar. With a weigh-your-plate format that doesn't punish modest eaters like the rodizio (all-you-can-eat) style does, Tudo Na Brasa offers a delectable, frugal taste of Brazil.

414 Main St., Woburn (781-938-0101) tudonabrasa.com

BARBECUE

THE SMOKE SHOP

Chef Andy Husbands' long experience vying for prizes in national slow-smoke barbecue competitions is fully evident at his pair of full-service BBQ joints, most especially in his oversized, gorgeously crusted St. Louis-style pork ribs. But the hits keep coming with excellent renditions of brisket, pulled pork, Texas hot links, smoked-then-fried chicken wings, collard greens and pit beans. A terrific whiskey list and lively honky-tonk atmosphere help make the Smoke Shop about as good as Yankee 'cue gets.

BREAD

Oak + Rowan

We've always counted on acclaimed pastry chef Brian Mercury for sweet finishes—but at Oak + Rowan, he shows the goods from the get-go by eschewing complimentary bread service for a truly thoughtful program that includes his stellar sourdough (made with the luscious whey produced from ricotta) and its accompaniments, like apricot-and-date butter, right alongside other starters. All breads, down to the crackers served with crudo, are made in-house, and it shows. It's not free, but it's fantastic.

BREAKFAST

Eastern Standard

This Kenmore Square staple is so well-loved for its evening cocktail scene that it's easy to forget how fantastic it is on the other side of the clock. Besides morning classics, the newer, health-conscious dishes don't sacrifice sophisticated flavor—we're thinking of egg-white tartine with avocado and radish and the ricotta- and poached egg-topped "salad for breakfast." ES excels equally as a power-breakfast destination and a pleasant wake-up call summoning Hotel Commonwealth guests from upstairs.

BRUNCH

TIGER MAMA

At her Fenway outpost of modern Southeast Asian fare, Tiffani Faison is notable as one Western chef who isn't afraid to wield the region's funkier flavors. That makes for a singularly eye-opening experience at brunch, where Asian takes on egg dishes and pancakes are complemented by chili-hot, umami-packed plates like papaya salad and pad gra pow, in addition to hangover helpers like a staggering double-pork-patty burger. Throw in some cool tropical cocktails, and Sunday never seemed so sunny.

CHINESE

BLOSSOM BAR

Ran Duan is doing for this Brookline Village outpost what he did for his family's other Sichuan Garden restaurant in Woburn: sexing it up with the kind of gorgeous, witty craft cocktails and Tiki-inspired drinks that brought him international acclaim. But don't overlook the sensational traditional Sichuan fare served here, with its bold, fierce flavors of blazing chilies and numbing Sichuan pepper, rounded out with American-Chinese classics like General Tso's for non-fire-eaters. It's a mala bombshell.

BURGER

Alden & Harlow

Chef/owner Michael Scelfo's "Secret Burger" is hardly hush-hush. At this point the patty—available nightly in limited quantities—is practically a bona fide Boston-area icon. False advertising aside, it deserves its fame. Even after he introduced a strong contender for its crown, a similarly scarce "WP Burger" at sibling spot Waypoint, we keep going back to Alden for Scelfo's signature Creekstone grind of brisket, short rib and beef plate. We bow to the burger king.

40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-864-2100) aldenharlow.com

CHARCUTERIE

Townsman

Employing the same nose-to-tail know-how that made him a four-time winner of Cochon 555, chef Matt Jennings was creating his own charcuterie long before every trendy restaurant made that a priority. The experience shows, as does his commitment to sourcing top-tier pork, duck liver and other products from small New England farms. But he really stands out for the occasional use of seafood charcuterie, using ingredients like poached fluke roe in terrines and making head cheese from striped bass. Go to town, man.

120 Kingston St., Boston (617-993-0750) townsmanboston.com

CHEESE PLATE

The Salty Pig

The menu lists them as "stinky cheeses," but that's certainly no comment on the quality of the fragrant, funky fromage at this Back Bay spot. The team always tracks down a lineup of varieties that reveal unconventional flavor profiles. Take the current selection of Italian and New England cheeses, which includes the standout Verde Capra from Piedmont, a rare blue cheese made with goat's milk inoculated with Roquefort spores for a bright, grassy flavor. Pig out.

130 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-536-6200) thesaltypig.com

COFFEE SHOP

GEORGE HOWELL COFFEE

Java junkies can thank Coffee Connection founder George Howell for kick-starting the specialty-coffee industry in Boston in the '70s, laying the groundwork for Starbucks and others to follow. Today, his eponymous roastery and cafes—with locations in the Godfrey Hotel and Boston Public Market—do it best. Attentive baristas serve third-wave brews including coveted single-lot varieties like the Kenyan Mamuto and espresso-specific blends such as Alchemy. Plus the brand keeps its fans educated, offering an ongoing schedule of "palate training" classes, cupping courses and more.

CLAM CHOWDER

Mooncusser Fish House

It's been a while since Boston had a seafood place as formal and elegant as this compact spot perched high above Park Square. In addition to white-tablecloth service and superb wines, Mooncusser can lay claim to the city's subtlest and dreamiest clam chowder: pristine littlenecks in the shell, chopped clams, bits of smoked scallop and skate, and crescent moon-shaped oyster crackers in a delicate, not overly dairy-dosed broth. Shore food in black-tie togs turns out to be an awesome idea.

304 Stuart St., Boston (617-917-5193) mooncusserfishhouse.com

COLOMBIAN

El Peñol

The constant presence of big, noisy family groups makes this small, modestly handsome restaurant near Eastie's Central Square feel like a nonstop party. It's not hard to spot the draw: staggering portions of hearty, meaty, mildly seasoned dishes like substantial soups, fried plantain plates and protein pileups like a cazuela of chicharrones, sausage, beans, plantains, potatoes and avocado served with fried egg-topped rice—all at absurdly sweet prices. Breakfast or lunch here might be all you need to eat for the day.

54 Bennington St., Boston (617-569-0100)

COMEBACK

Spoke Wine Bar

Rather than reinvent the wheel, Spoke's new team reminds us why we fell in love with this beloved neighborhood spot to begin with. The mournfulness that met its late-2016 shuttering is equaled by our elation over its return under the new ownership of former Spoke bartender Mary Kurth, Ribelle alum chef Eric Frier (performing miracles in a closet-sized kitchen setup) and oenophile Liz Mann, who's curating a still-knockout selection of biodynamic and small-production wincs.

CRUDO

BAR MEZZANA

Colin Lynch and Heather Kennaway Lynch have quickly established their seafood-centric restaurant as one of the city's most sophisticated Italian spots. That reputation owes a big debt to chef Lynch's crudos, combining subtle knife work, judicious marination and precise temperature control, as in dishes like shima aji (striped jack) exquisitely attired in understated accents of horseradish, chive and caviar. At a time when everybody and their brother is doing crudos, Bar Mezzana laps the field.

CONCEPT

Puritan Trading Company

Trying Uber Eats often ends in soggy, lukewarm tragedies—so we're loving the rise of "ghost restaurants," delivery-only outfits committed to serving dishes that retain dine-in quality despite traveling. Will Gilson leads the pack with this extension of his Puritan & Company restaurant; Trading has a separate menu of chef-driven spins on takeout favorites, like Jonah crab Rangoon with piri-piri sauce, scallop and linguica dumplings and street food-style seared udon noodles. File under: Trading up.

COOKBOOK

Myers + Chang at Home

Twice-cooked lamb belly stir-fry. Sweet-and-sour Brussels sprouts. The delicious dumplings. All our favorite Myers + Chang dishes are delineated for amateur home cooks in this kitchen tome, co-authored by the restaurant's eponymous legend Joanne Chang and departing executive chef/partner Karen Akunowicz, the James Beard Award winner who just announced plans for her own restaurant. Even if the book never makes it further than your coffee table, it doubles as some of sexiest food porn we've ever seen.

COOKIES

Modern Pastry

Few intra-Boston rivalries are as intense as the cannoli debate that rages between loyalists of North End institutions Mike's Pastry and Modern Pastry. We'll stay Switzerland in that war. But when it comes to cookies, consider us unequivocally allied with the Modern, whose glistening glass cases are always stocked with crispy anise treats and other delights that never fail to bring back warm memories of fresh-baked gifts from nonna.

COZY RESTAURANT

The Table at Season to Taste

After watching him on the small screen on Bravo's Top Chef, it's sort of surreal to be a fork's width away from Carl Dooley as he turns out stellar prix fixe menus from this intimate Cambridge operation's open kitchen. It has the feel of a dinner party with the most congenial host in town, and the classy new American cuisine is just as excellent on the standing wine bar menu, filled with gourmet snacks like rillettes of rabbit leg.

CUPCAKES

Lulu's Sweet Shoppe

The gourmet cupcake trend came and went—but Lulu's has lasted. Opened in 2004 as a local forerunner of the craze, Lulu's didn't bait your sweet tooth by hopping on bandwagons. It relied solely on founder Sandy Russo's heartfelt, homemade approach to her treats, inspired by the memory of her late mother's baking, that results in nothing but knockout flavors—from the signature cream-filled cupcake to Nutella, tiramisu and pistachio with port wine variations. Taste that? It's sweet success.

DATE-NIGHT DESTINATION

Pagu

Negotiating where to have dinner can be one of the more fraught aspects of dating. We like to table potential objections with a place that does Japanese and Spanish with equal brilliance. Chef Tracy Chang's casually hip Central Square eatery reflects her passions and range: Don't be surprised if you find true romance lurking amid her raw and cooked seafood plates, beautiful bowls of ramen and classic Basque-inflected tapas. Then there's the desserts like smoked purple yam ice cream and a stellar bar program, including shareable sips like the Rhubarbra Streisand's fruity mixture of house-blended rum and lime.

DELI

Mamaleh's

In the dark days before 2016, Boston lacked a deli that made its own Jewish soul-food classics in-house. Then came Mamaleh's, preparing pastrami, corned beef, knishes, latkes, lox, chopped liver and babka. While America's real-deli population is shrinking, Boston got a place that does proper pickled herring and bialys served with a side of love, and if you like, a nice cocktail. New York should be so lucky.

DIM SUM

Great Taste Bakery

Few pleasures in Chinatown are as simple and satisfying as a dim sum repast: plates of buns, steamer baskets of dumplings and pots of tea to fill in the corners of a Sunday morning or weekday afternoon. This Chinatown spot has a long Cantonese menu, but it's our favorite for its a la carte dim sum (everything made to order, no trolleys), with an exceptional selection of sweeter buns and cakes from its adjacent bakery.

DINER

My Diner

This Lower End fixture fell to the gentrification axe a couple of years ago, only to resurface in 2018 inside a big apartment building at an old South Boston distillery. Thanks to its odd second-story location, the reborn My Diner has some nice waterfront views and still slings American breakfast and lunch staples like giant omelets and house-roasted turkey dinners at popular prices. It's a welcome old-timey holdover from an iteration of Southie that's rapidly disappearing.

DINNER WITH MUSIC

The Ellis Room at Magnolia Smokehouse

Walking down this Brookline Village barbecue spot's staircase into its easily overlooked basement feels like stepping into another world. The intimate room features Prohibition-era decor, romantic lighting, serious cocktails and live music Thursday to Saturday ranging from jazz and blues to Americana and funk. Order off Magnolia's menu of American sandwiches, salads, pit barbecue and Southern fare. It's a cooler, one-stop version of dinner and a show.

DESSERT

Oleana's rep for delicious desserts—like its near-mythic baked Alaska—is a credit to executive pastry chef Maura Kilpatrick, who just received her fourth consecutive James Beard Award nomination. Young gun pastry chef Sophie Gees joined the team in 2016 and her positive impact is seen in the realization of elegant, exciting ideas like Turkish coffee parfait with candied chestnuts and cocoa-cardamom sauce, pistachio ma'amoul with olive oil ice cream and Middle Eastern-inspired sundaes. Consider this pair a dynamic dessert duo.

FAST-CASUAL

ANOUSH'ELLA

The world is being overrun by fast-casual restaurants in the mode of Chipotle: sterile national chains manufacturing sandwiches and salads from less-than-stellar ingredients with assembly-line soullessness. Pretty little indie Anoush'ella breaks this mold with Armenian-Lebanese wraps, salads, grain bowls, meze and desserts that are actually as fresh and exciting as they are highly customizable. And the prices are nice for its chic South End setting. It's representative of everything that fast-casual could be, but rarely achieves.

DOUGHNUTS

Kane's Donuts

Coffee-wise, America may run on Dunkin'. But when it comes to doughnuts, we dash to a much smaller outfit: Kane's, a family-run biz in the Financial District and Saugus. Somebody's still waking up early to make these fresh treats daily, using local ingredients like Somerville-based Taza chocolate. And every month, they come up with inventive specials—like a tequila-spiked tribute to Cinco de Mayo and June's gluten-free lemon poppyseed—that always get us sprinting back for seconds.

FOOD TRUCK

Papi's Stuffed Sopapillas

After a period in which everybody in Boston seemed to want to get into the food truck business at once, followed by early adopters going brick-and-mortar and getting off the street, our constellation of wheeled quick-service joints has cooled and settled a bit. Among the survivors, this purveyor of New Mexico-style deep-fried turnovers with savory or sweet fillings (like bulgogi-kimchi, pork al pastor and Nutella-banana) is a reliable standout for both busy office workers and SoWa Market strollers.

FRENCH

Craigie on Main

Looking for steak frites? Au revoir. Acclaimed chef/owner Tony Maws docsn't do rote brasscrie fare at this restaurant, celebrating its 10th anniversary as the scquel to Craigie Street Bistro. Rather, he applies classic technique to contemporary notions—like velouté of daikon radish, sirloin a la poele with sweetbreads and spinach, and confit and roasted pig's head with a boudin noir-hoisin sauce. Maws' famously beloved burger often steals food-world headlines, but his French-style sophistication is most formidable.

FRIED CHICKEN

SOUTHERN PROPER

Opening his own place after years as a mercenary chef, North Carolina native Jason Cheek brings Southern cooking to a South End setting reminiscent of the tobacco barns of his youth. In addition to a strong cocktail and beer program, Southern Proper proffers an array of elevated picnic foods like deviled eggs and pork rinds as well as quality slow-smoked barbecue. But the jewel here is Cheek's spectacular, juicy fried chicken, with its medium-thick, crisp batter and mild or hot seasoning.

HIDDEN GEM

OISA RAMEN SLURP & GO

In a Financial District overrun with dull fast-casual chains, don't miss this tiny storefront. It has the charm of a one-chef, Tampopo-style indie noodle shop and gorgeous bowls of ramen to match, especially the house dish with pork belly, soft-yolked soy egg, burnt-garlic oil, pickled ginger and mustard greens, noodles from the famed Sun factory, and a light, limpid tonkotsu broth. Bonus: It's open for dinner on weeknights.

GREEK

Kava Neo-Taverna

A smash hit practically from the moment it opened two summers ago, this tiny, soigne spot has obvious charms: its pale blue-on-white Mediterranean-chic ambiance, a great sidewalk patio on a placid corner of the South End, and above all, the ancient charms of traditional Greek wines and foods, many fire-kissed on a real charcoal grill. Arrive early to the no-reservations spot as the South End restaurant scene is hot once again; Kava helped rekindle it and has been keeping it stoked since.

If "hot dogs and beer" is a combo you most associate with Fenway Park, up your game—and get to Deep Ellum, where the acclaimed craft brew list with options like Lawson's Finest Liquids' Sip of Sunshine and a bunch of Belgian sours complements the best frank around. The Allston hipster haunt offers a Pearl dog topped with housemade kimchi, hot mustard and pickles. It's snappy and spicy, an alpha among also-rans and the perfect way to soak up all those super suds.

LUNCHDATES
PROFESSIONAL MATCHMAKING

The Dating Review:

LunchDates celebrates 36 years working with Boston's Best Singles

Your match may be one call away

sunny day in May, circa 1982. Our doors first opened and dat- g in Boston was changed forever. To say that dating has changed ould be an understatement. Back then Michael Jackson was nging "Thriller", CDs were the newest invention, E.T. was tell- g people to "Phone home!" and I was 5. Dating back then was ot as chaotic as it is today. Back then, people actually took lunch, ence our namesake. Today, you're working remotely or in an office nare, and may not even know the day has turned to night. We're verworked, overscheduled, and frankly, over-divorced. There's too any singles now. Way too many. That's why we're still in business.

What's changed in dating the most in the last 36 years?

echnology. It's the obvious answer, and it's true. Technology, in eneral, has changed our culture. Dating is no exception. There are ther factors though. More people are waiting to get married at an lder age—some are not get married at all—and the divorce rate is ver 50% in the United States. There are plenty of singles out there. hey're actually the slight majority. Now imagine connecting all those eople, instantaneously, through their phones. Anything can happen.

What's stayed the same?

/e've been doing this a long time at LunchDates. Matchmaking is a meless profession, and one we take to heart. People still want to ake a connection. They are all looking for someone that lights up their e and gives them a reason to smile, someone who makes everyday el like Valentine's Day. When we weave our magic and a connec- on happens, that's the best feeling in the world. It's a natural high!

What's the biggest challenge facing singles today?

o many choices. Waaaayyyy too many. Dating apps are a bless- g and a curse. Ask anyone who's single. Most people will tell you they're on 2-3 apps, and they're killing it. Everyone online is killing it. Egos abound. Cosmo recommends only one, but hey I say keep your options open. Then again, putting yourself out there and swiping for hours tows a thin line. Most of our clients could not only date on their own, they'd kill it. But they're picky. That's where we come in.

Think about it: If you have endless choices online, it's really tempting to never settle down. In absolute terms, this could happen. You could keep dating forever and ever online. You could have a first date every night of the week for the rest of your life. Is that what you want? We want to work with relationship-minded people.

What can Boston singles do to date successfully?

First, understand the terrain. Dating in Boston can be difficult. You're in one of the best cities in the world. From Fenway to the Common to the North End, we're lucky we have so many options. Oh, there's that word again. Options. So another thing, the competition is STEEP because the competition is everyone. Dating apps provide men and women with unlimited choices. True, that gets old. But now is the time to talk about a dating strategy.

Think about it. You create strategy in every other area of your life, except dating.

Every single person I've met has said they had "it" covered. They're in the game and they're, you guessed it, killing it. Little secret...

Going on a bunch of first dates does NOT make you a stud.

It makes you really good at setting first dates. The guy in the relationship, the guy that worked with a matchmaker that hand-picked the PERFECT woman for him, he's just fine with you working those single ladies. They should probably call us though.

Where's the future of dating going?

The swipe will never go away. It's here to stay, and actually has its place, but its time has come and gone as the ONLY way to meet single people. There are social single groups, organized races, charitable events, and all your cousins' weddings this summer. Here's another secret I'll tell you.

Not everyone is online.

That's right. I said it. Timing is everything with meeting the right person. That and being proactive. I've worked with a ton of singles that have shut the darn phone app off! They've had enough. And there are a whole group of very private, well-educated, professional singles that want personal service.

Executive Matchmakers, like us at LunchDates, are very busy right now. We're seeing a resurgence in people wanting a personal touch. It makes perfect sense in a world where dating apps are overwhelming people. Privacy is also an issue. Especially with online dating. Many of the dating apps you download have to be synced with Facebook and some people don't want that information readily available.

At the end of the day, we do what we do because we want to get people into a relationship. We use a personal touch, with a warm heart. It's one of the most rewarding professions in the world. And for those singles that we've helped, their lives are blessed for it.

Technology may have made it easier to find people, but that doesn't necessarily mean they find love.
At the end of the day, it's about two people making a connection that really counts. We just help move those things along.

Whoever inherited Jody Adams' Rialto spaee in the Charles Hotel was going to have a tough act to follow. But when Miehael Pagliarini announeed he'd also be ehurning out high-end Italian, he weleomed an even bigger ehallenge by inviting some daunting comparisons to Adams' 22-year haunt as well as to his own Cambridge restaurant Giulia, already a Boot-inspired beaut. ICE CREAM

Honeycomb Creamery

Here's a sweet story: Girl and boy meet, they get married, open a small-batch ice cream business and share their scoops with adoring fans. That's how Honeycomb startcd in 2015, and it's still dispensing the most delightful cones (in varieties like toasted coconut) at its Cambridge storefront and at a new spot on City Hall Plaza, using local farm-sourced cream to create flavored scoops like salted caramel crackle, matcha-pistachio and ginger-rhubarb crisp. They're a happily-ever-after at the end of any day.

ITALIAN

Erbaluce

Don't know Piemontese cuisine? This Bay Village indie will make you wish you'd discovered it sooner. Chef/polymath Charles Draghi prepares Italian food the way actual Italians like it: light and subtle and deep-flavored, relying on highly seasonal, local ingredients, with vegctable and fruit essences replacing butterfat in sauces. Partner Joan Johnson curates a superb, mostly Northern Italian wine list. Your North End-loving pals may not get it; bring Italian ex-pat friends instead.

JAPANESE

MOMI NONMI

Chef/owner Chris Chung's charming Inman Square bandbox offers a fresh, formidable take on the izakaya, a Japanese drinking den that also serves snacks. Here, the booze is an impressive selection of sakes and whiskies, the food a fascinating array of sashimi, poke, tempura, cooked seafood and the odd modernist cuisine touch. Clever land dishes also shine, such as a gluten-free "burger" served with fajita-like sizzle on a pad of rice. It's a pretty little package hiding subtle, surprising gifts within.

LARGE-FORMAT DISH

Seafood platter at Select Oyster Bar

When chef Michael Serpa left the North End's intimate Neptune Oyster Bar to open his own restaurant, he picked a similarly smallish space. But Select sends out seafood plateaus fit for Poseidon—or Papa: The multi-tiered assortments top out at the towering "Hemingway" ($325), which spills over with enough oysters (two dozen), shrimp cocktail (one dozen), crab salad, dressed lobster, tuna tartare and more (a lot), for four to eight guests. Bigger's not always better. But sometimes it is.

LATE-NIGHT

The Automatic

Night owls with midnight munchies have it rough around here. The options are limited, and the quality questionable. Thankfully, they can flock to The Automatic, where a late-night menu served from 10:30 pm to 2 am, seven nights a week, contains insane insomniac cravings like the hot sauce-spiked "Frito pie from Hell," Korean fried chicken sandwiches, "funky fries" topped with nori and togarashi spices and buffalo fried sweet plantains with blue cheese. When we can't sleep, this is what we dream about.

KOREAN

KAJU TOFU HOUSE

The Allston original and its new Kenmore Square sibling both specialize in the hearty, endlessly variable, texturally lovely, spicy-as-you-want-it sundubu jjigae (soft-tofu stew). But there's plenty more to adore in their bare-bones spaces, starting with above-average banchan (wee complimentary side dishes), vivid bibimbap, big plates of mild dumplings and pan-fried noodles, LA-inspired Korean truck tacos, clay-pot short ribs and grilled, ferociously spicy pork. It's a versatile crowd-pleaser for both veteran Korean food lovers and neophytes alike.

LOBSTER ROLL

Eventide Oyster Co.

The original Eventide in Portland, Maine, is a bright and modern update of the New England shore shack, offering crudos and a stocked raw bar as well as classics like fried seafood and lobster stew. Its new Fenway offshoot—in a darker, chic space with top-notch beer and wine offerings—goes fast-casual, with a slightly shorter menu of the same coastal hits, notably a lobster roll with brown butter on a Chinese-style steamed bao instead of a traditional Western roll. Canonical, it is not; but this lighter, fluffier incarnation lets the flavor of precious, increasingly pricey lobster shine through.

MEATBALLS

Coppa

Coppa, with its close quarters and packed South End patio, is still crushing it with Italian small plates, local and imported salumi, wood-fired thin-crust pizzas and Italian-sized (i.e., not oversized) pastas. For a place from Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette that also serves a sea urchin-and-tongue sandwich, the polpette are a pretty straight-up affair: pork and beef in red sauce with Parmigiano. Credit current chef de cuisine Brian Rae for wringing deeply satisfying flavors from a classic palette.

NEW RESTAURANT

Cultivar

Chef Mary Dumont's first restaurant of her own lights up downtown's Ames Hotel, bringing a worship of local fruits-of-the-earth that extends to her on-site hydroponic garden. Fresh herbs, microgreens and edible flowers adorn her exactingly plated compositions of elegant new American cuisine, while executive pastry chef Robert Gonzalez creates miniature abstract artworks for dessert. Lots of restaurateurs mouth the mantra of farm-to-table sourcing; Cultivar lives it, and wraps that rustic philosophy with a burnished urbanity.

PASTA

Pammy's

When chef Chris Willis opened this spot near Harvard Square last summer, he won immediate fans for its fireplace-lit, plant-bedecked ambiance. It doesn't hurt that Willis wrings such vivid flavors from great local produce and animal proteins. In particular, his housemade pastas (made from house-milled flour) really sing, from ricotta-stuffed cappelletti with English peas to more substantial lumache in gochuchang-accented Bolognese. There's surprising sophistication hiding behind that winsome little neighborhood-joint facade.

PASTRY

Bova's

This North End bakery is open 24 hours a day, every day—yet somehow, it still manages to rank behind two other neighborhood shops, Mike's Pastry and Modern Pastry, in sheer name recognition. Bova's, though, is the best-kept secret hiding in plain sight. Founded in 1926, the family-owned bakery churns out an overwhelming assortment of excellent sweet and savory treats: mouthwatering fresh fruit tarts and turnovers, cakes and calzones—and yes, cannoli that compete with the best of them.

PATIO DINING

SRV

Boston's finest rendition of a traditional Venetian bacaro boasts the requisite wine-bar ambiance and menu of cicchetti (small bites to accompany drinks) up front, as well as Northern Italian appctizers, pastas, risottos, and grilled and braised meats and seafood. Beyond its bar, standing-room lounge and neo-classic dining room, SRV has a patio that is comfortably secluded out back, away from traffic and noise. With string lights and a mix of bricks and greenery, it's a singularly serene urban oasis.

MIDDLE EASTERN

OUR FATHERS

The latest outing from the Franklin Cafe Group has a tremendous Eastern European-style deli next door with fabulous pastrami, corned beef and roast chicken, but its full-service restaurant and bar is even more exciting: a modern Israeli catery buttressed by a great gin-centric bar in a cool Space Age bachelor pad of a dining room. Dinner here is a breathtaking, whirlwind tour of global Jewish cuisine, drawing dazzling flavors from Iberia and the Middle East.

PERUVIAN

CELESTE

JuanMa Calderon and his partner/general manager Maria Rondeau are not restaurateurs by training, but you'd never know it from their new pocket-sized 24-seater, sparely decorated and set in a former acupuncturist's office near Union Square. Their classic menu of ceviches, causas (cold potato terrines), tiraditos, stews like aji de gallina and stir-fries like lomo saltado draw winningly from the breadth of Peru's richly multicultural, Asian-inflected culinary canon. It's a stunning debut, especially from first-timers.

PHO

Saigon Chicken House

Thanks to a population of more than 11,000 Vietnamese-Americans, Greater Boston has a fantastic Victnamese dining scenc centered mainly in Dorchester. That includes at least a dozcn great pho joints, including this Fields Corner newcomer, which wowed us with its free-rangc chickens sans hormones and antibiotics. Saigon Chicken roasts these into juicy, gloriously golden-skinned birds, an ingredient worth seeking out in a lot of dishes off its broad menu, and espccially in brown (dark meat) leg-and-thigh chicken pho.

PIZZA

Prairie Fire

This Coolidge Corner newcomer plates a punchy, short mcnu in a cool, understated dining room dominated by a wood oven. That bcast produces sublime, thin-crusted pics built from nicely conditioned sourdough, yielding just the right amount of edge-and-underside char and chew. Toppings are made from simple, beautiful ingredients like the classic Margherita's San Marzano tomato sauce, basil and frcsh mozzarella. It's a less-is-more philosophy that would do a Neapolitan pizzaiolo proud.

PLACE TO CHILL OUT

Brass Union

Therc was a time when we tried our hardest to avoid the cops while partying with our friends. Now, there's nothing we love more than drinking brews and playing board games at Brass Union, housed inside a former Somerville police station. Besides the collection of old-school board games and other rec room-ready diversions, like Pac-Man and shuffleboard, there are consistently cool cocktails, a congregation-friendly patio and weekend DJs dropping beats that build a vibe, not a riot.

PLACE TO GO WHEN MONEY IS NO OBJECT

DEUXAVE

There was a time when Brahmin-level splurging in the Back Bay assumed a visit to the long-standing L'Espalier. But in its eighth year, Chris Coombs' fine-dining spot is a more modern neighborhood institution with its own special-night status. Deuxave exudes lavish refinement in its French-American cuisine, award-winning wine program with $3,000 bottles of Burgundy and cultured comportment. No wonder it's earned a rep as a particularly popular wedding proposal restaurant: It shines like a diamond.

POWER LUNCH

MOOO....

Between the politicos and law partners, Beacon Hill needs a strong power lunching spot in the shadow of the State House's golden dome. Since 2007, Mooo.... has answered that call. The steakhouse sibling in chef Jamie Mammano's family of restaurants (which includes Mistral, among others) has the top chops and impressive environs that open wallets and close deals. And the private wine-cellar room, with dramatic vaulted ceilings, is fit for wooing a whole herd.

POP-UP

Humaari at Wink & Nod

Having closed his Fort Point restaurant Tavern Road last summer, chef Louis DiBiccari recently popped up again at Wink & Nod, the South End's very successful restaurant incubator. His latest concept draws from an eclectic Mediterranean menu, with dishes like naked or protein-dressed variants of tahini hummus, raw and grilled seafood and fried, grilled and roasted meats, like a whole porchetta. Get there before his residency ends this fall.

POUTINE

Café du Pays

Some spots just heap thousands of toppings on a bed of fries, then call it poutine. That's not the case at Café du Pays. The French-Canadian inspired newcomer to Kendall Square takes a minimalist approach much more faithful to the Quebecois: fries, gravy (made with meat stock thickened with fried chicken skin) and Vermont cheese curds, left classically unmelted. It's a respectful rendition that would impress even our neighbors to the north. Grade: "Eh"-plus.

Les Sablons

PRE-/POST-THEATER DINING

Ostra

A night at the theater is an event—and the accompanying dinner should feel like one too, not like a rushed, perfunctory exercise shoehorned in before the curtain goes up. Starting with its dining room blanketed in white tablecloths, everything about Ostra feels special: the dignified service, the ivory-tickling pianist and the elegant Mediterranean seafood-based cuisine—like EVOO-drizzled, salt-crusted whole branzino for two that is great for dates. "Dinner and a show" don't have to be two different things.

1 Charles St. South, Boston (617-421-1200) ostraboston.com

PRIVATE DINING

Les Sablons

The downside to private dining is that no one gets to see how stylish you look having a swanky intimate supper at the latest hot spot. So we love the semi-private space at Les Sablons, the Paris-chic continental cuisine entry from restaurateur Garrett Harker and the Island Creek Oysters crew, separated from the rest of the upstairs dining room by a curtain. Behind it, diners sit among custom art pieces like brooding portraits of David Bowie and Grace Jones. Somehow, you still feel like the star.

PRIX FIXE

Asta

After a long stint as sous-chef at Boston's acclaimed French restaurant L'Espalier, chef/owner Alex Crabb now puts up two of the prettiest, most sophisticated, carefully sourced prix fixe menus in the city nightly: one made of five courses, the other of eight. Serving on a small scale (the room only seats 41) with minimal pretentious trappings helps make Asta a relatively affordable alternative to Boston's toniest purveyors of Instagrammable small plates.

RAW BAR

NEPTUNE OYSTER

Before Neptune opened 13 years ago, Boston had a not-always-deserved reputation for great seafood restaurants. Thanks to the high bar that this North End standby subsequently set and continues to maintain, we've since steadily closed that gap. It starts here with raw bar featuring at least a half-dozen impeccably fresh, perfectly shucked oyster varieties from New England harbors plus a couple from the Pacific Northwest, as well as uni, raw clams and seasonal delicacies like stone crab claws.

63 SALEM ST., BOSTON (617-742-3474) NEPTUNEOYSTER.COM

PUERTO RICAN

Izzy's

At Izzy's, there are no frills, no table service, no tiny portions and no daunting prices. Customers feast on dishes like housemade beef turnovers and the trencherman's delight that is pernil: a staggering plate of tenderly slow-roasted, chewily rinded pork shoulder flanked by zippy mojo sauce for dipping, plus big sides of rice and superb, stewy beans. It's not hard to understand why this family-run joint has thrived near Kendall Square for 30 years.

RAMEN

Ruckus

The folks behind Chinatown's Shojo and BLR by Shojo have struck again with Ruckus, a bright, hip-hop-thumping space in which chef Mike Stark puts out sensibly-sized bowls of ramen with consistently great components, notably some utterly fabulous housemade noodles. Of the half-dozen styles of ramen, the highlight here might be the Miso Lit Ramen!!!, featuring a not-overly-fatty, Sapporo-style miso broth garnished with ground pork, grilled corn, beans sprouts, nori and Ruckus paste, a house-made chili condiment that packs a wallop.

RISING STARS

Andrew Brady and Sara Markey at Field & Vine

Chef/co-owner Andrew Brady and partner/general manager Sara Markey opened their little Union Square indie with just a few pop-ups and catering gigs under their belts, a Kickstarter and a wing-and-a-prayer. But these fresh-faced former amateurs are now crafting beautiful, delicious American fare with unstudied earnestness and bubbly hospitality. Go eat what they're serving today, and expect bigger things to come.

MOODY'S DELICATESSEN & PROVISIONS

Joshua Smith's wholesale New England Charcuterie ends up on the salumi plates of fine-dining restaurants all across Greater Boston, but you can get it on the cheap during lunch at his original Waltham location, and now in the Back Bay, too. You'll find those same superb cured, roasted and/or smoked meats in a smorgasbord of brilliant signature sandwiches, including gut-busting pileups of pastrami, corned beef, fantastic bologna (yes, bologna) and the world's most staggering pork-belly banh mi.

SALADS

Forage

Considering Forage's emphasis on hyperlocal seasonal menus—its helmed by alums of farm-to-fork specialist Ten Tables, which had a location here—it's probably not surprising that high-quality produce elevates its salads. Example: Heirloom lettuces from East Boston's Corner Stalk Farm, grown in shipping containers that serve as hydroponic gardens, are dressed with grated carrot and wild chive dressing. The under-the-radar restaurant also functions as a pick-up spot for CSA shipments from Western Maine's organic Buckle Farm. Rejoice, home salad chefs.

SEAFOOD

This Fort Point temple to our local seafood bounty draws steady mobs into its subway-tiled, industrial warehouse of a space. And they get what they came for: superlative raw bar, brilliant renditions of shore-food classics like clam chowder and lobster rolls and super-fresh fish—grilled or roasted or fried—all complemented by a murderers' row of fantastic craft beers. (A sibling in coastal New Hampshire has similar virtues.) Smart locals know to avoid the lines by using Reserve.

SOMMELIER

Kelsey McCallan at Catalyst

It takes more than impressive credentials to stand out in a city with many great wine professionals, but two Culinary Institute of America degrees and a Wine Spectator Award of Excellence can't hurt, right? Professional cooking experience is an asset, too, when much of the job is matching wines to food. Another essential quality is radiating a gentle empathy that makes less-experienced wine drinkers feel comfortable stepping out of their comfort zones. McCallan's got all of those in spades.

SOUTH ASIAN

Suvaai

Boston's South Asian food scene has evolved mightily since the bad old days of nothing-but-Punjabi-and-vindaloos of 20 years ago, but it took a while for Sri Lankan cuisine to arrive. This Porter Square spot is a fine introduction to its occasionally fiery wonders, like the edible scoops that are "string hoppers" (little noodle nests) for scooping up savory meat and vegetable stews, the Sri Lankan variant of Southern-style dosas and the novel flatbread that is ground rice-and-grated coconut roti.

Toro

The original collaboration between Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette hasn't had a slow evening in its 13-year history, thanks to a sizzling mix of traditional and modern Barcelona-style tapas buttressed with inspired wine and cocktail programs. Bring a date or a group, sample a bevy of hits like pan con tomate, maíz asado, uni bocadillo and paella Valenciana, maybe pour down a little Jumilla, and you'll be glad you endured the dining room's hectic rush, too.

STEAKHOUSE

Grill 23 & Bar

The primal, popular charms of the skillfully grilled hunk of marbled beef are evidenced by the fact that Boston has at least 15 luxury steakhouses. But some are better than others. We favor local ownership, prime—and only prime—beef from boutique sources, the range to offer both costly dry-aged cuts and budget steak-frites, and a mountain of wines. That culls most of the chaff, leaving this clubby, venerable Back Bay institution alone atop the dais.

SUSHI

Cafe Sushi

Once a secret shared by food nerds and local chefs, this unpretentious spot's gotten a lot more attention lately. To sample its essential omakase, served only at the sushi bar, you now have to make reservations weeks in advance for popular nights—so plan ahead. Between the elegance of chef/owner Seizi Imura's knife work and the pristine quality and rarity of his choicest morsels, it's not just quietly stunning, but one of the best values in town.

TACOS

Rincón Mexicano

Fancy, overstuffed tacos from Yanqui restaurateurs are a dime a dozen in Boston, but we have a dearth of super-traditional taquerias helmed by Mexican ex-pat chefs—the kind of place where dinner for two might run $25. The latter is what's going on at this humble East Somerville joint. And it has it so going on that it recently expanded into an adjacent storefront. Don't miss Sinaloense specialties like tacos of cochinita pibil, cabeza and tripa.

TEAHOUSE

Gen Sou En

Studies show that today's 20-somethings represent the first American generation to prefer tea and coffee equally. So expect to see many more places like Gen Sou En, the area's first modern Japanese teahouse. Brookline's all-day operation serves fab breakfast sandwiches, bento boxes and baked goods, and comes from Japan's 100-year-old Harada Tea Company. The owners smartly tapped credible and cool locals to lead its first cafe—like Backbar cocktail sensei Sam Treadway, here tackling top-shelf green and black tea.

THAI

Kor Tor Mor

Located off bustling Davis Square, this pocket-sized specialist in Thai street eats will floor even veteran food geeks with its novel options such as moo ping (marinated grilled pork with sticky rice), wicked-hot e-sarn sausages, fried fish balls, num tok (grilled pork skewers with fiery lime dressing) and the house specialty, khao na kai, a heartwarming chicken and gravy dish with a fried egg on rice. It's a kicky, bargain-priced stroll down a Thai side street that Bostonians rarely glimpse.

VEGETARIAN

SARMA

You don't need to be a vegetarian to hang with chef/owner Cassie Piuma on her wild ride from Spain to Turkey to Morocco and everywhere in between: She also cooks plenty of great meat and seafood small plates. But is there another local place that treats vegetable-lovers better, with a more vibrant spice palette or wittier meldings of tradition and invention? Sample her seven-layer hummus, asparagus shakshuka and zucchini muever, and your answer will be no, too.

TOAST

Juliet

Now-ubiquitous gourmet toasts have almost become self-parodying shorthand for "millennial taste buds." But in Union Square at this lovely European-style cafe, you won't find those #basic avocado-smeared jokes that are the epicurean equivalent of Ugg boots. Chef Joshua Lewin has toasts available, in some form or another, breakfast through dinner—and they're vessels for serious food, like eggplant puree with Persian-spiced dried fruit and chickpea Basque piperade. They're emblematic of Juliet: both youthful and refined.

TORTAS

Chilacates

A tiny Jamaica Plain taqueria could be spawning a local chain. Since 2015, when it debuted its closet-sized space near the Stony Brook Orange Line Station, Chilacates has added a second Jamaica Plain location and future openings are planned in Mission Hill, the South End and Chestnut Hill's buzzy outdoor mall The Street. The tortas are a highlight; we're talking fillings like spicy chicken tinga and chorizo topped with Monterey jack cheese, refried beans and avocado and jalapeño mayo. We'd love one at every street corner.

UPGRADE

Madera 83

For a moment, this Charlestown address had a bit of an identity crisis: Two years ago, restaurant owner Samar Naamad revamped his North African catery, the seemingly successful Tangierino, as a Moroccan-French hybrid. It felt muddled. Crystal-clear, though, is the success of its transformation to Madera 83, a full conversion to Spanish small plates. The croquetas, albondigas and other taberna-apropos fare are a fantastic change of pace, making us forget the old memories to build new ones.

This handsome 30-seater with a busy takeout counter serves daily breakfast, lunch and dinner a stone's throw from Eastie's Central Square. Popular with family groups, it serves homey, traditional Venezuelan dishes in hefty portions. Arepas Venezolanas (chewy corn flatbreads) topped with proteins like pabellon (shredded beef, black beans and sweet plantains) or catira (shredded chicken and white cheese) are essential centerpieces to any meal here. Plus the prices are wonderfully gentle.

BEER LIST

AREA FOUR

Beer buyer Rairon Krauzer taps into his wealth of hops knowledge when selecting suds to pair with the restaurants' crispy pies. He prioritizes new, limited-availability local brews like Cold Harbor Brewing's Damsel, part of the burgeoning "juice bomb" movement of citrus-forward IPAs, and weekly specialty sours from Trillium, always on beer geeks' most-coveted lists. Krauzer continually tracks down underexposed, draft-ready discoveries, and educated servers ensure only the most killer pizza-beer combos.

CONCEPT

Trillium Garden on the Greenway

It turns out all the city's beer drinkers wanted was a breath of fresh air. And it helps to have some damn good beer, too. Nestled into a 4,000-square-foot spot on the red bricks of the Rose Kennedy Greenway, this seasonal beer garden served the acclaimed Trillium beer—including the brand's first lager—and was packed from its June opening till its final day in October. Its success has spawned a number of similar concepts across the area and even another one on the Greenway. With string lights, a refrigerated trailer and bench seating, it remains the perfect excuse to leave work early. Gotta avoid that line.

COZY BAR

Brick & Mortar

Cantabrigians and industry types hoof it to this upstairs bar, behind an unmarked door next to sibling restaurant Central Kitchen. Even as an early-evening quiet yields to a buzzy din, the place keeps a cozy feel. Maybe it's the warm tones in the brick walls and the copper-topped, horseshoe-shaped bar that feels like a drinking circle. More likely, it's servers who reward regulars with gestures like Ponies in the Surf, a kitschy horse head-shaped mug that garners guffaws—and goodwill—as it makes the rounds.

DIVE BAR

Biddy Early's

Boston's once-gritty downtown scene has changed—except at Biddy Early's, where the long-running dive bar's sticky floors, graffiti-covered bathrooms and cheap beer pay no mind to the surrounding upmarket developments. PBRs are not pounded ironically here, whether by barfly scallywags, after-work FiDi dudes or budget-conscious 20-somethings. And in a neighborhood courting increasingly classier crowds, you have to love the saltiness of a spot whose wine menu is a dry-erase board offering "red or white."

DRINKS WITH A VIEW

TOP OF THE HUB

Trendy spots open regularly, but Top of the Hub remains the apex of special-occasion cocktailing, the place to celebrate proposals, promotions, anniversaries and birthdays with a bit of bubbly. Offering sunny skyscapes and glittery fields of the city's night lights, its still-unbeatable 52nd-floor views are worth drinking in anytime. So instead of leaving them to the tourist droves, reclaim a bar seat as one of Boston's own and garnish your cocktail with a front-row view.

FIRST-DATE DESTINATION

LION'S TAIL

This Ink Block resident has all the trappings of romantic beginnings: atmospheric lighting, cozy banquettes fit for long conversations, a curved bar that encourages elbow canoodling and a storybook-illustrated menu that might just be the beginning of your own happily-ever-after. Choose from a medley of small bites and entrees while an expert staff pours classic cocktails alongside playful, pop culture-inspired quaffs that'll impress your object of desire.

GAY SCENE

Once service wraps, this Dorchester restaurant transforms its dining room into a dance floor for LGBTQ-oriented weekly nightlife events—like singalong Show Tunes Tuesdays and massive Magnum Saturdays dance parties—plus themed soirees that draw thick crowds of costumed revelers, including neon face-painted throngs for a recent UV Party. And with Nick Daddona (a past winner of Boston's Best sommelier) recently appointed to oversee the beverage program, we know top-shelf tipples will soon make dinnertime drinks an equal draw.

HIDDEN GEM

Tasting Counter's natural wine bar

Chef Peter Ungár's prix fixe dinner destination is already a hidden gem, its high-end, esoteric cuisine tucked inside a Somerville warehouse that's also home to a craft brewery. The natural wine bar, serving rare bottles and complementary snacks on Tuesday evenings—plus during late-night hours Wednesday through Saturday—is a gift within a gift, a nifty nesting doll revealing all sorts of exciting, affordable surprises that start at $8 per glass and represent sustainably harvested organic and biodynamic grapes.

Ruka

At this chic yet playful ground-floor inhabitant of the Godfrey Hotel, the nikkei (Peruvian-Japanese) cuisine isn't the only example of flavorful bedfellows. Bartenders dream up all sorts of killer combos, including recent notions like the Mama Quilla, mixed berry pisco with rum, orgeat and burnt rosemary. Plus there's a standout sake selection and a snappy scene that lures just as many attractive after-work crowds as travelers looking for a nightcap.

INDUSTRY HANGOUT

Charlie's Kitchen

After a long day slinging fancy drinks and serving highly particular patrons, the last place Harvard Square's hospitality types want to unwind is somewhere stuffy. That's why they head to Charlie's, the Square's decades-old institution that's a half-step above dive status. They flock to the jukebox in the raucous upstairs barroom and snag seats around fire pits in the all-season beer garden, tossing back cheap brews, trading war stories and making off-hour memories.

IRISH PUB

The Burren

It takes a while to convince out-of-towners raised on Ben Affleck movies, but Boston's best Irish pub isn't in Southie—it's in Somerville, where this spot named for a rocky region of the Emerald Isle hosts an always-hopping scene. Properly poured Guinness pints accompany nightly live music lineups, ranging from traditional seisún artists to local indie singer/songwriters. This is where you'll find old Irish fiddleheads sharing bar space with millennial hipsters, shouting "sláinte!" into the night.

PORTO

Raise a glass to Jody Adams, recently named to the James Beard Foundation's "Who's Who" list, and do it on the spacious patio of her Mediterranean restaurant. Set under strings of twinkling lights, the terrace is outfitted with lounge seating and its own bar, which serves surprisingly inexpensive $5 cocktail specials. Plus, Porto's position on Ring Road, a short side street on the backside of the Prudential, is attractively tucked ever-so-slightly away from Boylston Street's buzz.

JAZZ CLUB

Wally's Cafe

The city has been bleeding live music venues lately: Ryles Jazz Club, a decades-spanning Inman Square haunt, is the latest casualty. Luckily, we still have the even-older Wally's, founded in 1947 as reportedly the first black-owned nightclub in New England. In a fast-evolving South End, Wally's still packs in music lovers with nightly jazz and funk jam sessions, and maintains its rep as a training ground for greats with a student-led education program.

NEW ADDITION

City Winery

Go for the music and stay for the wine. Or go for the wine and stay for the music. Either way, just go. With acts ranging from Arrested Development to Kat Edmonson, the intimate 200-person main venue often rocks, while the wine list in the Haymarket Lounge and dining room showcases more than 400 winemakers and includes 20 bottles produced in-house. There are also about a dozen sulfite-free wines available on tap, meaning your hangover might be a little easier to manage the next morning. You'll just have to worry about those ringing ears from the music.

We're guessing that those seeking out solo sipping spots aren't exactly looking for anyone to talk to them. One place you're guaranteed to avoid stranger chitchat: the movies. This Seaport newcomer serves gummy-garnished cocktails and draft brews from Clown Shoes. Order a bottle of wine in the Lobby Lounge and polish it off during adults-only evening screenings. And with six feet of leg room between the rows of plush, heated seating, you won't be spilling any drinks on the way to your designated spot.

POOLSIDE COCKTAILS

HOJOKO

Inside the music-themed Verb Hotel, relax like a rock star around this kicky izakaya's courtyard pool. The West Coast vibe is very "Hotel California," but the Eastern-inspired cocktail menu takes things in a Tiki direction via communal punches (like the rum- and fruits-filled Royal Waioli), frozen libations (such as the Japanese Caucasian with vodka, coffee and condensed milk) and surprisingly refreshing bombs (including a tequila and pineapple shrub soda). Here, our favorite verb is "swig."

PLACE TO FEEL LIKE A KID

Lawn on D

At the moment, playgrounds might be hard to find in the Seaport, but there's still a spot to relive your childhood. This parcel on the backside of the Boston Convention & Exhibition Center is now the de facto fair-weather hangout for nostalgic fun: watching throwback blockbusters like E.T. and Jurassic Park under the stars, catching live music from '80s tribute bands and snapping selfies in the spot's signature neon-glowing, circular-shaped swings. It has all the charm of childhood, but with adult beverages like ciders, shandies and hoppy IPAs.

PRE-/POST-FENWAY PARK

Bleacher Bar

Celebrating the 10-year mark, this bar's main draw never gets old: It's inside Fenway Park—under the bleachers, specifically—and you don't need a ticket to enjoy views of Jackie Bradley Jr.'s backside. But there's more to gawk at than just the field, as the walls are filled with Sox mementos and even the restrooms are adorned with former signs from the historic ballpark. With a menu featuring more than two dozen sandwiches like a burger topped with pastrami, you might take your eyes off home plate long enough to enjoy what's on your own plate.

PRE-/POST-TD GARDEN

Bodega Canal

Considering the current cost of Bruins, Celtics and concert tickets, it pours salt in fresh financial wounds to ante up for overpriced drinks at TD Garden. Save said salt for the margaritas at this new Mexican bar and restaurant that brings the West End a much-needed, non-dive option for show- and game-day drinking. Get your team in the spirit by pounding a signature shot like the Mexican Firing Squad—jalapeño-infused tequila with watermelon and lime.

ROOFTOP BAR

Lookout at Envoy

Our only complaint about rooftop bars is that the season to enjoy them is mercilessly short. The Envoy Hotel has fixed that, though. Not only does its Lookout lounge offer stellar skyline views on sunny days, but when the mercury drops it rolls out a half-dozen heated, clear "igloos" that fit eight to 10 fleece blanket-swathed sippers who, with the press of a button, can request another round. And the Envoy will get even hotter in July, when capacity jumps from 290 to 390 with a 2,500-square-foot expansion.

SAKE

Uni

Sake is served by the glass, pitcher, on tap and in trendy tipples at this Back Bay spot, where the 60-bottle selection takes cues from chef Tony Messina's menus. The most refined palates gravitate toward top-tier selections like Hakutsuru's Flight of the Crane junmai daiginjo, which has both vibrant fruit characteristics and a subtle umami backbone that complements the sushi and small plates. Indecisive? Don't be. Just sip through a slew with a tasting flight.

SIDEWALK SWAGGER

LOCO TAQUERIA & OYSTER BAR

This swinging Southie joint doesn't need much help attracting attention: The massive street-side windows, always filled with buzzing crowds of human tequila tankards, does that just fine. But shoutout to the spot's sidewalk letter board, which eschews advertisements for pithy phrases concocted by the staff. Bon mots like "I avoid checking my bank account because what you don't know can't hurt you" and "Snow shoveling tip: Bend your knees and move to Los Angeles" grab our notice, get us inside and make fantastic Instagram fodder.

SINGLES SCENE—OVER 30

Yvonne's

You'd expect to find a sexy scene at a spot named for the subject of a nude painting inside. And you'd be right. A scorching hot spot since its 2015 opening, Yvonne's inhabits the former space of fine-dining icon Locke-Ober, a men-only establishment for much of its century-and-a-half run. Both sexes now commingle over cocktails—including large-format love potions like the passionfruity Jungle Bird. These supper club-inspired digs suggest a meat market of Kobe quality.

SINGLES SCENE—UNDER 30

Lucky's Lounge

It's ironic that an establishment so well-known for a long-running Sinatra brunch and Rat Pack-style aesthetic would wind up as a popular watering hole for millennials who probably think "Ol' Blue Eyes" refers to Jake Gyllenhaal. Yet Lucky's has been a swinging place to score long before Fort Point attained its newly attractive rep, luring after-work suits and Southie neighbors with live music that gets hips grinding and reasonable bar tabs that leave wallet wiggle room for morning-after Uber rides.

SPORTS BAR

The Broadway

OK, so it's not technically a sports bar. But after sliding copper panels reveal two 98-inch screens and Dave O'Brien's commentary booms full-blast over the speakers, it's game on. SUMMER SCENE

Legal Harborside

Fifty years ago, when the first Legal Sea Foods opened in Inman Square, throngs flocked to picnic tables to enjoy the fresh fish. Now—in a neighborhood that didn't even exist back then—Legal Sea Foods plays host to a different kind of hot spot: One of summer's coolest, buzziest bar scenes. It's hard to imagine going anywhere else to soak up sunrays and sip sangria when the Harborside outpost offers such stunning vistas of the water from its third-floor rooftop lounge—plus, intentionally or not, live tunes whenever there's a concert at neighboring Blue Hills Bank Pavilion. Save concert money; spend it on rosé.

TAP ROOM

Lamplighter Brewing Co.

It didn't take long for the folks at this Cambridge brewery to realize they were going to need a bigger space. Whether it's the food from local pop-ups, coffee from in-house Longfellows cafe or the weekly trivia nights, this former garage has attracted a large crowd since debuting in late 2016. Thanks to a new additional taproom, there's even more space for customers to enjoy a signature sour ale like Metric System and a bevy of other suds, such as the Birds of a Feather New England-style IPA and the Ele saison, while lounging on a couch or unwinding at one of the long benches.

THE LODGE AT PUBLICO

In the summer, the open-air courtyard at Publico stands as an oasis from the heat and bustle of the city, but the addition of a retractable roof added a new dimension: a winter getaway. A DIY hot cocoa bar, warmed-up cocktails and some lodge-inspired bites were whipped up for the cold-weather pop-up's menu, while faux animal heads, cozy blankets and snow decor lent an après ski feel to the ambiance. Next year, you might as well skip the slopes and head straight to the bar.

In a world where cocktail menus are turning into novels that require a bartender's dictionary, it's even more refreshing to slake our thirst at Barbara Lynch's decade-old subterranean spirits den—so cool that it doesn't even have a printed list; guests simply belly up to one of the bar's six corners, describe what they like and let the imbibing experts do the rest. You're in good hands as many of this haunt's bartending alums have gone on to helm their own cocktail programs throughout the city. Bonus points for its only-by-request burger, a spectacular secret bite served nightly in limited quantities.

Seersucker isn't required, but it certainly won't go unappreciated at this Seaport sibling to Nantucket's similarly swank Lola 41. After all, the fab waterfront spots (named for their respective latitudinal lines) are the kind of place where black card-droppers guzzle drinks like the $40 "Nemo's No Return," high-end tequila and muddled fruit topped with Yellow Label Veuve. No matter the season, Lola's ACK-approved name recognition guarantees a sea of smart-dressed sophisticates of the summer-is-a-verb stripe.

It may have relocated last year to different digs downtown, but it's consistency that characterizes Troquet's always-impressive wine program. The 32-page list doesn't have a dud in the bunch, and though many bottles are under $100—providing options for oenophiles of varying budgets—there are also nearly 20 labels that are more than $1,000, representing rare finds for hard-to-impress aficionados. BAND

STL GLD

Mere months after earning Album of the Year at the Boston Music Awards with their politically-charged "Torch Song" (which addresses police brutality and other themes), emcee Moe Pope and producer The Arcitype baked a comparatively confectionary new single, "Donut Shop." ENCORE

Leonard Bernstein at 100

The late Lawrence-born composer and conductor Leonard Bernstein is getting quite the birthday bash—a centennial celebration that spans six continents. That includes lots of happenings in his native Bay State as Brandeis, Boston Ballet and a host of other arts groups join the party. The Boston Symphony Orchestra (with whom Bernstein performed more than 100 times) kicked off its season with an all-Bernstein gala program and an opening night featuring music from West Side Story, while Boston Lyric Opera staged his Trouble in Tahiti and Arias & Barcarolles at a North End ice rink in May. If you missed those, no worries—Bernstein's work is being showcased all summer at Tanglewood, and other festivities continue through Aug. 25, 2019.

HOT TICKET

The White Card

Making its world premiere to a packed 150-seat theater in February, this trenchant and timely one-act was penned by acclaimed poet and playwright Claudia Rankine, presented by ArtsEmerson and produced by American Repertory Theater. The drama begins at a dinner party where the hosts—a pair of wealthy white art collectors—clash with their guest of honor, a black artist whose latest project responds to the 2015 church shooting in Charleston, South Carolina. Karen Pittman's knockout performance anchored the play, which posed incisive questions about privilege and then after the curtain call the conversation continued with facilitated discussions.

NEW DIGS

KABINETT GALLERY

In April 2017, after a decade dealing in rare books and manuscripts, Gabriel Boyers opened Kabinett Gallery inside a 200-square-foot space—only slightly larger than an actual cabinet of curiosities. He's since gained more breathing room, bringing exciting, eclectic art back to the SoWa site previously occupied by the late, lamented Samson Projects. The new digs debuted with Killers & Thrillers, which featured works by more than 50 artists, from Paul Gachet's deathbed sketch of Vincent Van Gogh to a collection of shanks from Folsom Prison and erotic lithographs by John Lennon and Marlene Dumas. Thrilling indeed.

MOST ANTICIPATED

Hamilton

Rabid culture vultures are coveting tickets for Hamilton, the rap-centric Broadway musical-cum-cultural phenomenon that finally arrives at the Boston Opera House for a rare long run: Sept. 18 through Nov. 18. The award-deluged show about America's Founding Fathers is also a progressive celebration of ethnically diverse casting in a country that's still learning that representation really matters, and brings Walnut Hill School for the Arts alum Nicholas Christopher back to town as the titular character's dueling partner, Aaron Burr.

NONFICTION BOOK

Bygone Badass Broads by Mackenzi Lee

Local author Mackenzi Lee hooked us with her #BygoneBadassBroads dispatches every week on Twitter, and she's just as inspiring with a higher character count. Accompanied by Petra Eriksson's bold illustrations, her follow-up to The Gentleman's Guide to Vice and Virtue features compelling yet conversational profiles of 52 diverse trailblazers mostly missed by history textbooks, from ancient Greek gynecologist Agnodice and World War II secret agent Noor Inayat Khan to Revolutionary War heroine Sybil Ludington, who rode twice as far as Paul Revere (at age 16, no less).

NOVEL

Little Fires Everywhere by Celeste Ng

After the success of Big Little Lies, Reese Witherspoon is the Hollywood bookworm/producer with the Midas touch. And it has landed, quite rightly, on this incandescent tome by Cambridge novelist Ng, which is currently being adapted for a Hulu series. The bestselling page-turner explores an arson case in 1990s suburbia that sparks a fallout between families, while examining important issues of race and class along the way. Named Amazon's best fiction book of 2017, Fires is just Ng's second novel. We're burning up for her next.

THE FRONT PORCH ARTS COLLECTIVE

This new theater company is making a grand entrance. The Central Square Theater-based troupe is committed to training, retaining and showcasing black and brown theater artists on stage and behind the scenes, too. Its first project—a yearlong reading series of seven plays by Marcus Gardley—ran through March, and we're on the edge of our seats awaiting its inaugural full season, set to kick off in November with Daniel Beaty's Breath and Imagination, a production that'll put collective co-founder and lauded local scene stealer Maurice Emmanuel Parent in the director's chair.

PODCAST

The Lonely Palette

Hit play on this podcast that "returns art history to the masses," a tagline that host Tamar Avishai lives up to by opening each episode with off-the-cuff commentary from everyday museumgoers. From there, the adjunct lecturer at the Museum of Fine Arts does a deep dive into the work in question, be it a Pollock or Picasso painting, a Duchamp readymade or Yoko Ono's Cut Piece performance. Whatever the subject, her assured yet accessible narration paints a vivid picture with words.

RISING DANCE STAR

Ian Berg

There's nothing routine about the work of tap dancer and choreographer Ian Berg. The 2016 Boston Conservatory grad is pushing the form forward with his company's emphasis on improvisation and collaboration, evident in dynamic works like Something Else!!!, which includes original compositions created with local jazz act Factory Quartet, and Eggs Your Way, a piece that's revised after every performance based on audience input. It's no surprise the company's earning slots on major stages like February's CRASHfest and Jacob's Pillow, where it'll close out the fest's Inside/Out series on Aug. 25.

RISING THEATER STAR

Alexis Scheer

While still a Boston Conservatory undergrad, this multi-hyphenate founded Off the Grid Theatre Company to produce boundary-pushing shows like imminent premiere Our Dear Drug Lord, about a Pablo Escobar-worshipping girl gang. The Miami native also penned Wynwood, a mother-daughter comedy set in Art Basel that will come to Boston Playwrights' Theatre, and Chosen, a solo show about a young woman's Taglit-Birthright trip to Israel. As for Scheer? We'd follow her anywhere.

UNEXPECTED DANCE DESTINATION

ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER MUSEUM

Isabella Stewart Gardner famously stipulated that her precise arrangement of art must remain unchanged, but there's still plenty in motion at the museum. Indeed, the Gardner is putting new emphasis on dance with programming like November's Migrations, which featured four world premieres, including one by Boston- and Port-au-Prince-based choreographer Jean Appolon that drew on his own immigration experience. Plus, the museum recently appointed its first choreographer-in-residence, Dance Complex executive artistic director Peter DiMuro, who'll be creating works that respond to the collection. Nice move.

SOCIAL SPARK

The Boch Center

Art ought to enrich communities, and the Boch Center brings that maxim off stage and into creative social practices. The nonprofit steward of the Wang and Shubert theatres has implemented artist-teacher residencies at Boston Public Schools, produced diverse showcases for local talent (including Tremont Takeover, a genre-spanning inclusive concert) and empowers young creatives through its Teen Leadership Programs. A recent Music Teachers Who Inspire contest awarded grant money and perks. The Boch Center is leading—and educating—by example.

URBAN CANVAS

Underground at Ink Block

As luxury condo buildings crowd the South End's once-industrial SoWa district, developers have to work harder to preserve the neighborhood's arts-community roots. So, kudos to this public-private partnership, which covered the eight-acre I-93 underpass in colorful murals by a variety of street artists such as Boston-based Percy Fortini-Wright. The awesome urban park is now brimming with bike paths, outdoor fitness classes, food truck fests and a forthcoming seasonal beer garden from the Castle Island Brewing Co. crew. In other words, Underground goes above and beyond.

But Black Picasso also embraces the commercial smarts of contemporary street artists, putting his work on custom jean jackets and other apparel so that we can all become walking works of art.

Boston Harbor Distillery

Craft distiller Rhonda Kallman decided to show one of the area's mill buildings some love, renovating this waterside spot into a rustic, inviting venue that hosts celebrations for up to 140 guests. Receptions are held in the 3,000-square-foot tasting room, with 40-foot ceilings, more than 100 windows, exposed brick and whiskey barrel cocktail tables. Cheers to the BHD ambassadors who can walk guests through the production and bottling areas for a behind-the-scenes tour.

SUITS

Hive & Colony

The buzz isn't always about the bride. Bespoke suits, tuxedos, sport jackets, overcoats and shirts at this Copley Place shop rely on both old-school tape measures and new technology for the groom's sharp-dressed moment. Step into a 3D scanner where 14 laser sensors take 100 measurements, then choose from 2,000 premium fabrics and finish with handpicked cuffs, lapels and other personalized touches. They'll even host private events for you and your groomsmen to help you get fitted in style.

WEDDING GOWN DESIGNER

David Josef

The first thing you'll notice about David Josef is his yards of charm. Once the sketchpad comes out, so does his sharp design eye. His fashions have appeared in publications like Harper's Bazaar—donned by none other than supermodel Iman—and he recently outfitted Bill Belichick's daughter-in-law for her Nantucket nuptials. He can create something from scratch or retool vintage, an asset that comes in handy for his passion: creating modern, modest gowns for Orthodox Jewish brides.

PLANNER

42 NORTH WEDDINGS

Francie Dorman and Britt Cole recognize that even an empty field can become an elegant locale. After 15-plus years of planning weddings together at private estates and non-traditional venues, they've done it all. Need a specialty carpenter to build a dining platform by a beautiful pond? Perhaps a florist to create a flower "sky"? They budget, scout, design and coordinate for the monumental day, limiting their schedule to only 10 couples a year so that ideas remain fresh.

FASHION

BAGS

All Too Human

Jessica Knez and Joseph Morrissey decided to bring hard-to-come-by designers to Boston via their two-year-old concept boutique All Too Human. In this half-shop, half-art gallery, well-established brands like Chloé and Proenza Schouler build a diverse collection alongside up-and-comers like JW Anderson. Men can rejoice too, with niche-market fashions including zipped belt bags from Alyx—just don't call them fanny packs!

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

Kodomo

Fashion has trended black, gray and white for countless seasons, but nestled in this shop lies a pop of pink that every kid dreams of. Add interesting prints, whimsical patterns and cute, critter-inspired designs, and there's a whole wearable menagerie just waiting to be discovered by parents trying to find fun and comfortable children's wear—and by kids who just want to look good.

CLOTHING DESIGNER

Erin Robertson

It wasn't that long ago when Project Runway judges went bananas for Erin Robertson's offbeat signature styles featuring vibrant colors and fruit patterns. The season 15 winner and Cantabrigian keeps the genius coming with an MIT Media Lab collaboration—for which she tapped researcher Jifei Ou—and collections at her South End studio, including plexiglass-bedazzled wrap dresses and hand-painted slips at heftier price tags and more affordable items like T-shirts, bags and scarves.

CONSIGNMENT

Castanet Designer Consignment

Those who love the thrill of the chase can call Castanet's owner their knight in shining armor. After 15 years working at predecessor The Closet, Cassie Knight is an expert at curating collections of nearly-new shoes, bags and dresses from trending designers and elusive labels. She knows every piece in the store back to front, offering service that's far more personalized than scrolling through your web browser. From glittering heels to polka-dot blazers, Castanet brings buried treasures straight to your closet.

DYNAMIC DUO

JAY ADAMS AND KATIE DEMO OF BRASS

Best friends and fashionistas Jay Adams and Katie Demo decided to combine their experience in manufacturing and e-commerce—along with a shared distaste for trying to get ready for work in the morning—to benefit women everywhere. Brass blends quality basics with added flair for affordable curated kits or solo items. Even better, their Real Model database contains a variety of body types to get a realistic sense of how these ethically sourced pieces will look on your own frame.

PARIDAEZ

The power of fashion is transformative, especially at Paridaez, where the majority of owner Allison Daroie's pieces can be worn multiple ways. Take the Albatross design, which works as a pencil skirt, dress or tank top, or the Hummingbird, a five-in-one skirt, shawl, scarf, hood and top combo. Made in Massachusetts, the neutral and blush-toned garments are ideal for women with limited prep time—including when you're trying to pack a carry-on for a last-minute getaway.

HIDDEN GEM

Mobilia Gallery

Precious stones be damned. With baubles such as earrings made from tiny vintage tin cars courtesy of Americana artist Denise Barr, there are plenty of domestic and international treasures at Mobilia. If you're adorning yourself, check out the moderately to luxuriously priced rings, brooches and necklaces, or bedeck your home with bowls, vessels or conversation pieces like furniture maker Yoko Zeltserman-Miyaji's mahogany sculptures and functional boxes of drawers. With a constantly rotating collection of imaginative trinkets, Mobilia keeps its displays as fresh as its designs.

JEWELRY DESIGNER

Michele Mercaldo

Who do you trust to take grandma's engagement ring and make it all your own? Michele Mercaldo has been that person for countless couples seeking to redesign family heirlooms using ethically sourced stones and recycled metals. The timeless rings, necklaces and earrings from this MassArt grad—along with those of other designers in her South End shop—have gilded some of the city's most fervent fans of contemporary trinkets.

MEN'S ACCESSORIES

SAULT New England

This is the place to go for fashions you won't have to replace next year. That's because SAULT pairs quality, classic styles with contemporary trends. The South End standby stocks perfect-fitting henleys, worn-in retro tees that pay homage to the New England seacoast and more, including comfy kicks and anchor embossed wallets.

MEN'S CLOTHING

Mr. Sid

After 50 years in Newton Centre, the Segel brothers opened a second location in the Seaport for those looking to dress up their wardrobes. Along with chic Italian styles from labels like Ermenegildo Zegna, there's also Sunday-suited denim from Paige and Joe's Jeans—or opt for the outfitter's own Sid Blu label. Bonus: Shopping naysayers can take advantage of consultants who make office and home visits.

SHOES

ARTEMIS DESIGN CO.

The magic carpet ride continues for Milicent Armstrong, whose family history in weaving and Turkish textiles goes back to the 1800s. Her inspiration for brightly colored patterned loafers crafted from vintage rugs began as a small operation in her South End apartment, though these days she's pairing up with boutiques and companies as far as Bermuda and Japan as well as U.S. trendsetter Madewell. While Armstrong continues to travel frequently to source for future collections, orders still ship from a space in Allston that's not too far from her original location.

PARTY DRESSES

Crush Boutique

Whether your ideal festive frock is bedazzled and accessorized with baubles or simple, light and breezy, there's something for every personality, shape and budget at Crush. Fashion-forward but approachable brands like Bailey 44, Splendid and Greylin are interspersed with the romantic whimsy of labels like Milly, all curated by lifelong friends and shopaholics Rebecca Hall and Laura Macris. A heads-up: You'll probably walk out with some matching jewels and handbags, too.

SNEAKERS

Bodega

Bodega's storefront may be hidden in plain sight, but most of the kicks in this shoe shop (disguised as a convenience store) are far from understated. Its shelves are brimming with bright colors from Boston's own New Balance Nor'easter and avant-garde styles courtesy of Raf Simons' futuristic deconstructed Replicant Ozwego. Plus, collaborations with Adidas, END. Clothing and other of-the-moment brands make Bodega a shoe destination worth running to for sneaker junkies.

VINTAGE

Bobby from Boston

The best legacies endure, sartorially and otherwise. For years, Bobby Garnett helped Boston's best-dressed incorporate vintage pieces from his South End treasure trove into their wardrobes, and today, after his death, daughter Jessica Garnett Carrion carries that torch. While Bobby's used to skew toward men's styles, the location has transformed a former storage space to include a more prominent collection of women's clothing and accessories.

WOMEN'S ACCESSORIES

Flock

Bohemian doesn't have to mean budget-busting at this South End shop, where simple beaded necklaces and geometric metal studs run the gamut from ritzy to reasonable. In the winter, chunky knit scarves and pommed caps are tucked into every corner of the store, while funky straw hats from outfitters like Janessa Leone appear as the warmer weather arrives. Grab one of the hand-painted ceramic mugs, noteworthy greeting cards or Illume soy candles in stock—perfect for all seasons.

WOMEN'S CLOTHING

Dress Boston

You might wish Martha Pickett and Jane Schlueter's Beacon Hill haunt was your own closet. In a store that's more Brahmin than budget, find high-end yet approachable staples like curve-hugging Mother jeans, flirtatious Birds of Paradis tanks, flowy Ulla Johnson blouses and silky Saloni dresses. Enhance your wardrobe with cozy cotton, muted tones, the occasional pop of color and ruffles for days, but you'll also be tempted by candles, fragrances and books.

WATCHES

BACK BAY WATCH COMPANY

It's no surprise that founder Michael Lembo hails from Waltham, also known as Watch City. His collections for men and women combine elements such as Japanese movement, stainless steel and leather with classic designs for a selection of wristwatches named after some of the city's most iconic streets. The Exeter, Beacon and Arlington all feature round faces proportionally scaled to timeless bands, proving that unlike most of today's tickers, bigger isn't always better.

The Boston Shaker

A decade ago, former tech guy Adam Lantheaume—inspired by his love of after-work drinks at the B-Side Lounge—opened this cocktail lover's supply shop filled with tonics, shrubs, tools and more, including hand-blown Tiki mugs and Old-Fashioned glasses from Cambridge artist Andrew Iannazzi. Every item on the shelf is tested by the mixology maestro himself, and you can even do your own research by dropping into the Bitters Tasting Bar or taking the shakers and other equipment for a spin in the designated practice space.

BIKE SHOP

BIKES NOT BOMBS

This Jamaica Plain biz has been giving new meaning to the word recycling since 1984. For the nonprofit, it's more like re-cycling—as in rebuilding and reusing bikes. Of the 6,000 two-wheelers rehabbed annually, most go to countries in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, but lots go on sale at the shop, which also offers repairs and do-it-yourself clinics in addition to mentoring and job training for Boston teens.

MOVING SERVICE

Box Save

Apartment hunting too often comes with a sequel: Box hunting so you can move all your stuff. But now you can call off that search. From its Woburn warehouse, Box Save services Greater Boston, delivering stackable boxes made of recycled materials that resist water, have handles and don't need tape to seal. While you still have to do the heavy lifting, they'll pick up the empty containers at your new digs, saving you the hassle and saving the earth some natural resources: One ton of cardboard uses 17 trees.

PET TREATS

POLKADOG BAKERY

Pets who munch on pasture-raised meat jerky and Alaskan salmon chips are some lucky dogs. Their gratitude should go to this purveyor's inspiration, four-legged friend Pearl, a one-eyed stray pup who the owners rescued and nurtured with home-baked dishes. The brand taps Everett-made Teddie peanut butter for its Wonder Nuggets, and this summer they'll move their headquarters and production kitchen to the Boston Fish Pier to get even closer to the local fishermen they call on for freshly caught treats like dehydrated clams.

STATIONERY

Of Note Stationers

It's time to do away with digital thank-you's. Co-founders Kate Kellman and Isabel Bonenfant are bringing back the joy of old-fashioned letter-writing with cards, pins, stationery and unique ephemera sets to inspire a note for any occasion. The pair sells their goods, including custom invitations, out of their Amherst studio, though snail mail aficionados can find their minimalist designs across the city at spots like Good, 1630 Boston and Olives & Grace.

Come to Light

You'll flip over this scenic show

STEP RIGHT UP AND see the light when Cirque du Soleil's Luzia swings into the Big Top at Suffolk Downs this summer. After a decade living and traveling in Mexico, writer and director Daniele Finzi Pasca penned the spectacle—in collaboration with Brigitte Poupart—to bring audiences on a vibrant journey through the country. Each of the 11 numbers is inspired by a different region or period in Mexican history, as 44 artists perform on sets built around the themes of light ("luz" in Spanish) and rain ("lluvia")—including a massive downpour producing different shapes and patterns. Run away to the circus when Luzia comes to Suffolk Downs from June 27 to Aug. 12. Julia Aparicio

Cirque du Soleil's Luzia lands at the Big Top at Suffolk Downs from June 27 to Aug. 12 (617-568-3216) cirqueduso leil.com See website for complete details

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Nathan Tavares

DYE LAUGHING Whether Jeff Dye is playing the young stud alongside TV legends Henry Winkler and Terry Bradshaw in Better Late Than Never—the NBC adaptation of a South Korean show about grandpas' international adventures—or telling the story of how he stole former NFL kicker Mike Vanderjagt's Pro Bowl jersey, the comedian is likely to earn a deep-bellied laugh. The Seattle native admits that before he began his career at Giggles Comedy Club he was never the smartest kid in class, but always excelled in cracking up his peers. Years later, the laugh maestro has made a name for himself, proving his cred in MTV's Money from Strangers, Numbnuts and Girl Code. MOVIES

UNCLE DREW ★★ ½ Spending most of my evenings in a darkened theater, I miss certain things like professional sports. So, when I sat down to watch Uncle Drew, a comedy centered on a group of septuagenarian basketball players who reassemble and take to the court one last time, I had no idea who Kyrie Irving was. But then, I wouldn't have recognized the Boston Celtics point guard and NBA All-Star, since he dons a mound of old-age makeup to portray the titular character. Drew's recruited by Dax (Get Out's Lil Rel Howery), a dreamer who's drained his life savings to enter into the Rucker Classic hoop tournament in Harlem. The only catch is that the longtime loser has just lost his team to lifelong rival Mookie (Nick Kroll), who's also stolen Dax's girlfriend, Jess (Girls Trip's Tiffany Haddish). Stunned when he sees the mythical Uncle Drew school some cocky young players on a local court, Dax convinces the legend to join his team, but the old man has one condition: He gets to pick the roster. Reluctantly, Dax agrees, and the duo embark on a road trip rounding up Drew's old squad of former NBA stars, including Preacher (Chris Webber), Lights (Reggie Miller), Boots (Nate Robinson) and Big Fella (Shaquille O'Neal), who all don wigs and ridiculous amounts of latex for the goofy fun, which was spawned from a series of viral videos produced by Pepsi. As such, there's product placement galore—but the sugary drinks aren't nearly as saccharine as the film itself. Nevertheless, it engaged this benchwarmer. ADRIFT ★★½ Baltasar Kormákur—director of 2015's Everest—does a bit better with his latest real-life tale of adventurers taking on the elements, thanks in no small part to the chemistry of the film's two leads. But viewer, beware: A third-act twist nearly capsizes what starts out as an engaging story of survival set on the high seas. Based on Tami Oldham Ashcraft's memoir, Adrift stars Shailene Woodley (also one of this movie's producers) and Sam Claflin (co-star of The Hunger Games films) as Tami, a free-spirited dockworker, and Richard Sharp, the world-traveling British sailor from whom she becomes inseparable. Setting sail from Tahiti toward Tami's home port of San Diego, the two lovers have no way of anticipating that they're headed directly into one of the most catastrophic hurricanes in recorded history. Using a structure that alternates between flashbacks of their budding romance and a post-accident present that finds Tami struggling to keep her badly injured boyfriend alive after pulling him from the sea, screenwriters David Branson Smith (Ingrid Goes West) and twins Aaron and Jordan Kandell (Disney's Moana) focus on the couple's past pleasures to help pull them—and the audience—through their harrowing situation. With very little food and little hope for rescue, Tami struggles to find the inner strength to save the man she hopes to spend the rest of her life with. It's a pity the filmmakers didn't trust the strength of the true story, relying on a late twist to add unnecessary drama. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Hearts Beat Loud ★★★1/2 For the past few years, filmmaker Brett Haley has been quietly making wonderful character dramas populated by actors who most producers wouldn't necessarily think of when trying to attract a mass audience. With a light comic touch and tentative romances to ground them, pictures like 2015's I'll See You in My Dreams and last year's The Hero featured rare starring roles by 75-year-old Blythe Danner (Gwyneth Paltrow's mom) in the former and 73-year-old perennial cowpoke Sam Elliot in both. Haley tends to bring out the best of his performers, and his latest, Hearts Beat Loud, is no different. While his leads are a bit younger this time, 24-year-old Kiersey Clemons performs small miracles as Sam Fisher, an old soul who's more mature than her dad, Frank, who has done his best to raise his daughter after the tragic death of his wife a decade ago. Played by 47-year-old Nick Offerman (from Parks and Recreation), Frank struggles to earn enough money from his modest Brooklyn record store to pay for Sam's upcoming first year at medical school, but he still finds the time to pull her away from her studies for impromptu father-daughter "jam seshes" as the summer winds down. And as we'll soon hear, she's inherited her chanteuse mom's amazing set of pipes. When not making music alongside her dad, Sam navigates her first relationship, with local girl Rose (American Honey's Sasha Lane), armed with the knowledge that she'll soon be leaving them both behind. With great warmth, the hearts beat as loud as the toe-tapping songs that fill the soundtrack. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Hereditary ★★1/2 You'll see few debut films more technically accomplished than Ari Aster's Hereditary. Clearly, the 30-something graduate of the American Film Institute Conservatory is a natural behind the camera, but once his horror mashup of Ordinary People and Rosemary's Baby reaches its increasingly silly third act, it's clear his screenwriting abilities could use more work. While many might find this movie's denouement to be terrifying, Aster's overwritten finale should have left more to the imagination. But thankfully, the buildup is unsettling to just about anyone. More than the meticulously framed symmetry of the Kubrickian visuals, or the taut editing that strings the shots together, it's the unnerving sound design that will keep most viewers on edge, driven by a near constant use of low-frequency noise. Taken together, these elements generate a strong feeling of queasiness as viewers witness a family fracture during the events after the funeral that opens the film. Perspectives are upended from the first frame forward; as such, it's not quite clear who the protagonist is, even if Annie Graham (Toni Collette) sees the most screen time. It's her mother who has died, and the dysfunction the two shared is creeping into Annie's relationships with husband Steve (Gabriel Byrne) and their two children, gloomy stoner Peter (Alex Wolff) and his odd younger sister, 13-year-old Charlie (newcomer Milly Shapiro). But the strong character arcs only make Aster's derivative climax all the more frustrating.

DOOM SERVICE Two-time Oscar winner Jodie Foster stars in Drew Pearce's thriller Hotel Artemis.

(At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

HOTEL ARTEMIS ★★★ You'd be forgiven if you mistake this film for yet another Purge sequel—that one opens in July. These riot-torn, nihilistic near-future films all seem to blend together. But writer/director Drew Pearce (co-writer of Iron Man 3 and Mission: Impossible—Rogue Nation) has landed a solid lineup of thespians for his dystopian vision of 2028 Los Angeles, which he and cinematographer Chung-hoon Chung (lenser of last year's It) proudly shot on artfully lived-in soundstages courtesy of production designer Ramsey Avery (10 Cloverfield Lane). Two-time Oscar winner Jodie Foster plays an agoraphobe known only as The Nurse, a quiet, no-nonsense shut-in who runs a secret, members-only hospital that caters to the criminal underworld, situated inside an armored upper floor of an old art deco hotel. OK, so Pearce obviously borrows a few pages from John Wick's playbook, as well, including the requisite assassin (Sofia Boutella), the hot-headed son of a mobster (Zachary Quinto) and well-choreographed bouts of gun-and knife-play. Sure, it's derivative, but any movie that gives Guardians of the Galaxy's soulful muscleman Dave Bautista a chance to hold his own with Foster (while playing an orderly named Everest, no less) is original enough. It might aim low, but fans of B movies should enjoy catching this one on the big screen before it becomes a future staple of late-night cable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

OCEAN'S 8 ★★1/2 Steven Soderbergh manufactured so many sequels to Ocean's Eleven that he could probably make one of these heist movies in his sleep. But even though he's settled into a role as producer, his fingerprints can still be felt all over Ocean's 8. Co-writer and director Gary Ross (The Hunger Games) creates a passable cover version, which in some ways hews closer to Lewis Milestone's original Rat Pack rendition from 1960. Ross lacks Soderbergh's dexterity, however, which leaves much of the heavy lifting to be done by his actors. And let's be honest, the plots of these films have always been secondary to the joy of watching old pros having fun, whether they be Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jr. and Peter Lawford, or George Clooney, Brad Pitt, Bernie Mac and Matt Damon. So it's only fitting that during this moment of female empowerment, we're being served a new twist on the formula. Sandra Bullock plays Debbie Ocean, scam artist sister of big brother Danny (George Clooney), who's supposedly dead—which seems as likely as Danny having a heretofore unmentioned sibling. Rounding out the cast of thieves are Cate Blanchett, Helena Bonham Carter, Mindy Kaling, Rihanna, Awkwafina and Sarah Paulson—but it's Anne Hathaway who steals the movie playing a coddled actress not too far removed from her worst tabloid self. And like the Met Gala at the center of the film's plot, there's lots of glamour to be found, but significantly less substance than even Soderbergh's diminishing sequels offered. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

ON CHESIL BEACH ★★★ Novelist Ian McEwan (Atonement) adapts his novella set during a single hour in a hotel room into this screenplay that's filled with flashbacks upon flashbacks to flesh out the personal histories of the newlywed protagonists. But unfortunately, the couple remains largely internalized on the pages of McEwan's best-selling story. Saoirse Ronan and relative newcomer Billy Howle (both currently appearing in Michael Mayer's Chekhov adaptation, The Seagull) take center stage in first-time director Dominic Cooke's On Chesil Beach. The year is 1962, and Florence Ponting (Ronan) is a wealthy young classical violinist who first locks eyes with Edward Mayhew (Howle), a history scholar of humble origins, at a nuclear protest. It's love at first sight, not only for the two lovers, but also for Edward's schoolteacher father, Lionel (Adrian Scarborough), who immediately pulls his son aside after meeting Florence, instructing him to "marry this girl." Florence also brings out the best in Edward's mother, Marjoric (Anne-Marie Duff), whose brain damage leads to a nudist streak. Florence's conservative mother, Violct (Emily Watson), on the other hand, has enough wits about her to be mortified by this relationship, which builds to a breaking point during the newlyweds' quarrel that the film is built around. Throughout the narrative juggling, Cooke manages to cast a nice spell, grounded by a solid sense of time and place. Sadly, that all breaks down with the introduction of rubbery old age makeup, which robs the film's coda of some of its heartbreak. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Solo: A Star Wars Story ★1/2 Unlike Gareth Edwards' surprisingly enjoyable war movie/heist picture Rogue One—the first standalone Star Wars film to deviate from the episodes focusing on the Skywalker clan—Ron Howard's Han Solo origin story suffers greatly from what was probably always going to be an identity crisis. Howard replaced Solo's original directors, Phil Lord and Christopher Miller, after they'd already shot three-quarters of a script co-authored by fan favorite Lawrence Kasdan, who penned The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi. Perhaps nobody could have filled the boots of 75-year-old Harrison Ford, who first took on Han Solo in 1977. Alden Ehrenreich, 28, brings a bit of swagger to his portrayal, but he lacks the hot-headed temperament best embodied by the combination of Ford's icy stare and his Finger Point of Doom. Amazingly, this signature gesture isn't convincingly deployed even once in this Western-influenced noir that doubles as yet another heist-driven Star Wars movie. To be honest, it'd be shocking if anyone could pull off a film about a proto-Solo, but it would have been interesting to see what kind of gonzo comic tone that Lord and Miller—best known for The Lego Movie, along with 21 Jump Street and its sequel—were conjuring for their visit to a galaxy far, far away. Alas, it only lifts into orbit whenever Donald Glover slips into one of Billy Dee Williams' super-fly capes as a spectacularly believable Lando Calrissian. The Force is weak with this one. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Tag ★★1/2 First off, this is not a remake of Tag: The Assassination Game, the low-budget action thriller that was a staple on HBO back in the '80s. However, director Jeff Tomsic's new comedy does share a plot that hinges on grown men who refuse to act their age. And while no one is murdered in this new film, some of the violent takedowns between friends have been photographed to look extremely painful for maximum comedic effect. Loosely based on a Wall Street Journal article entitled "It Takes Planning, Caution to Avoid Being It," the movie follows five friends in their 40s who've been spending the month of May engaging in the same childhood game for three decades. They may be grown-ups with adult responsibilities, but as the movie spells out through on-the-nose dialogue, this annual rite of spring serves to "keep us in each other's lives!" Tomsic, a television veteran making a jump to the big screen, has assembled a terrific cast of middle-aged men to play the old friends, including Jon Hamm, Ed Helms, Jake Johnson, Hannibal Buress and Jeremy Renner, who really seem to be enjoying their time together despite a script that isn't quite up to their talents. Still, a running gag about the fitness instructor (Renner) who's never been "it" provides the film with enough fuel to keep things interesting; he's so invested in the game that he's failed to invite his buddies to his wedding for fear of being tagged at the altar. But, taking a page from Wedding Crashers, these lifelong pals would do anything to infiltrate the nuptials. Silly and slight, Tag's still funny and sweet. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Upgrade ★★★ At the twisted nerve center of actor and writer-turned-director Leigh Whannell's low-budget horror/thriller is an artificial intelligence that's soon to be implanted into the neo-cortex of Grey Trace (Logan Marshall-Green), a Luddite car mechanic who feels woefully out of place in a near future that's not as Utopian as it seems. Case in point: the violent mugging that kills his wife Asha (Melanie Vallejo) and leaves him a quadriplegic. But when Eron (Harrison Gilbertson)—the Elon Musk-like billionaire for who Grey recently constructed an old-fashioned muscle car—offers to restore use of the grease monkey's limbs, Grey reluctantly agrees. The experimental procedure will fuse an AI chip dubbed STEM (voiced by actor Simon Maiden, who supplies his best HAL 9000 impression) onto his spine. It's here that Whannell's darkly comic horror impulses—the 41-year-old Aussie is one of the creators of the Saw franchise—overtake the film, just as STEM takes control of Grey's motor functions. It turns out that STEM provides not only arm and leg movement, but also an automated (and inventively well-choreographed) killing ability that comes in handy when Whannell transforms his film into a Death Wish-styled revenge picture as the unusual buddy team of Grey and STEM track down Asha's killers with a detective (Get Out's Betty Gabriel) hot on their trail. It's silly, predictable fun for audiences who enjoy old-school splashes of creative violence. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Won't You Be My Neighbor? ★★1/2 Button up your sweater, lace up those sneakers and run to the nearest theater showing this affectionate portrait of the late Fred Rogers, the kind-hearted television host who guided generations of children through emotional ups and downs, treating them with a respect that they rarely received elsewhere. Bring tissues, too. Even if you weren't fortunate enough to have grown up with Fred (affectionately known as Mister Rogers) and the life lessons and civility he imparted on our nation's youth throughout the second half of the 20th century, the waterworks will open up at some point during this nostalgic documentary, which will make you wish you did. Director Morgan Neville (Oscar winner of best documentary for 20 Feet from Stardom) has the unenviable task of distilling nearly 900 episodes of low-budget, but miraculously magical public programming involving hand puppets and toy trolleys into 94 minutes of basic human decency and kindness—which is something we could all use in these deeply divided times. In addition to memorable clips of Mister Rogers' Neighborhood, the film is made up of photos, home videos and archival interviews with Fred himself, as well as new interviews with his friends, family and members of his cast and crew, which have been blended together with animated segues and smiles—lots and lots of smiles. Perhaps you've seen footage of Fred addressing the U.S. Senate back in 1969, single-handedly convincing them to allocate $20 million toward continued funding of PBS. This movie might just make a contributor out of you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

FEMINIST FUNK It's been five years since multihyphenate star Janelle Monáe released a full-length studio album. In the meantime, she's been commanding the screen with roles in acclaimed movies Hidden Figures and Moonlight. But the half-decade wait for a new record ended earlier this year with the debut of Dirty Computer, which she says reflects the years-long struggles she encountered with her race, gender and pansexuality. Monáe got a little help on the album from her mentor Prince before he died, and the work paid off as the record peaked at No. 6 on the Billboard 200 in May. Get dirty when Monáe logs onto the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion stage on July 21. / Nicole Rodger

SOUTHERN BEAUTY

Sally Mann has gained plenty of accolades during her 40-year photography career, but she's never had an international traveling exhibit of her work until now. Before showing in Paris next year, A Thousand Crossings will fill the Peabody Essex Museum with 115 images from the woman who was once named "America's Best Photographer" by Time magazine. Including some previously unpublished photos, the collection portrays Mann's vision of the South while exploring themes on family, the land, racism and mortality. Grappling with a region and its people and places that were torn apart by segregation and violence, the pictures capture scenes ranging from her three kids playing near a remote cabin in Virginia (Easter Dress, pictured) to photographs of Civil War battlefields. Come see the wise Mann's works at the Peabody Essex Museum from June 30 through Sept. 23. / Nicole Rodger

Edited by Cathryn Haight

MANHUNT

Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants star Amber Tamblyn leaves behind the silver screen and takes up pen and paper with Any Man, her debut novel that spotlights Maude, a shadowy female rapist preying on men. Writing in the voices of the story's victims and traversing between poetry and prose, Tamblyn weaves together a narrative that shows the importance of empathy and vulnerability as Maude's victims come to terms with their assaults. The book also sheds light on rape culture while exploring how friends, family and the media react to the victims. Flip the narrative at the Brattle Theatre on July 24. / Anapurl Feldman

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

CHARLESMARK HOTEL AND LOUNGE [655 Boylston Street, Boston, 617- 247-1212, Charlesmarkhotel.com] 40 room Luxury boutique hotel. Located at the marathon finish line across from the BPL. Location, value and ambiance are keys to their success. The lounge is a stylish popular neighborhood after work location featuring Martinis and flatbread pizzas. Wine tasting parties are famous here. Private event space available. Coming this fall a new restaurant concept . Stay tuned.

HARBORSIDE INN AND LUXURY LOUNGE [185 State Street, Boston, 617-723-7500, Harborsideinnbostom.com] 116 room boutique hotel, Location, value and stylish décor are the trademarks of this popular hotel. The Luxury lounge inside the hotel features after work entertainment. Fridays and Saturdays provide a DJ and dancing. The space is available for Private Events. State of the art lights and sound with custom high end design make this a hidden gem.

Brunch

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays. Grill centric favorites include the North Carolina Pulled Pork & Eggs, Eggs Diablo, and The Burger Benedict Deluxe. Enjoy all with glasses or pitchers of Back Deck's Jerk Bloody Mary or Berkshire Summer, with craft gin and restaurant squeezed lemonade.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] Join us for our Acoustic Brunch as Chef Owner Jamie Mammano puts his modern spin on classic brunch dishes. Our impressive bar offers a variety of craft cocktails and playful options for Bloody Mary's! Brunch served Sunday's from 10am to 2pm. Breakfast and Lunch served weekdays, Dinner daily. Mooo.... also offers an impressive Wine Cellar and private Parlor Suites; the solution to successful business or social entertaining. Open All Major Holidays, adjacent to XV Beacon Hotel.

AND THROUGH THE WOODS

Judging by Runway to Miracles—a fundraiser fashion show for St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital—the western suburbs are populated almost exclusively by impossibly beautiful women and their absurdly adorable offspring.

The Improper was proud to sponsor the event, which was held at the Wellesley Country Club. It began with cocktails and a gargantuan silent auction, followed by a catwalk presentation starring the stunning moms and their kids. Front and center: co-chairs Kristie Zaccagnino and Dalia Nuwayhid (whose parents flew in from Dubai for the occasion), the delectable Caroline Coco Hudson, gorgeous news anchor Sara Underwood, fitness guru Georgia Janos, fashionisti Gretchen Monahan and Daniela Corte, broadcasting broad Sue Brady Hartigan, Celtics sylph Heather Walker, The Improper's own Wendy Semonian Eppich, emcee and swimsuit model Susan Wornick, the unsinkable Kelley Tuthill, beneficent babe Caroline Balz and one woman who said, "I may not know much, but I know my way around the bar at the Wellesley Country Club."

However, the evening's choicest exchange came when someone asked one of the moms how she'd gotten her kids to participate in the runway show. "Easy," she answered. "I told them they'd get out of school early—and if they didn't do it, they'd have to visit my mother-in-law this weekend."

A QUESTION OF SYNTAX

Anyone nostalgic for '90s rave culture would have had full wood at ClimActs! GLOW, the annual benefit for the Theater Offensive, held at Royale.

The evening began with a VIP reception featuring special guest and RuPaul's Drag Race contestant Kennedy Davenport, attracting the likes of co-chairs John Haga, Steve Hanton, Joan Moynagh, Kevin Powers and Rodney Raftery, the organization's founder, Abe Rybeck (who said about his Barbarella-meets-cheerleader get-up, "I look like I beat up a little kid and stole her Frozen outfit."), do-gooders Danny Gessner and Thomas McKeen, event planner Michael Wasserman, Huntington Theatre bigwig Temple Gill, incorrigible scamp Adrian Budhu, award-winning director Summer Williams, sexy state Sen. Julian Cyr, Boston's fairy godfathers Harry Collings and Dan Moon and one man wearing a rainbow-feathered headpiece, complete with a unicorn horn. Once the larger crowd arrived, things got hot and steamy, and suddenly an otherwise civilized Wednesday evening somehow became a July afternoon in P-town.

The night's winning remark: One man said, "My boyfriend made me volunteer," to which someone else said, "We call that being volun-told."

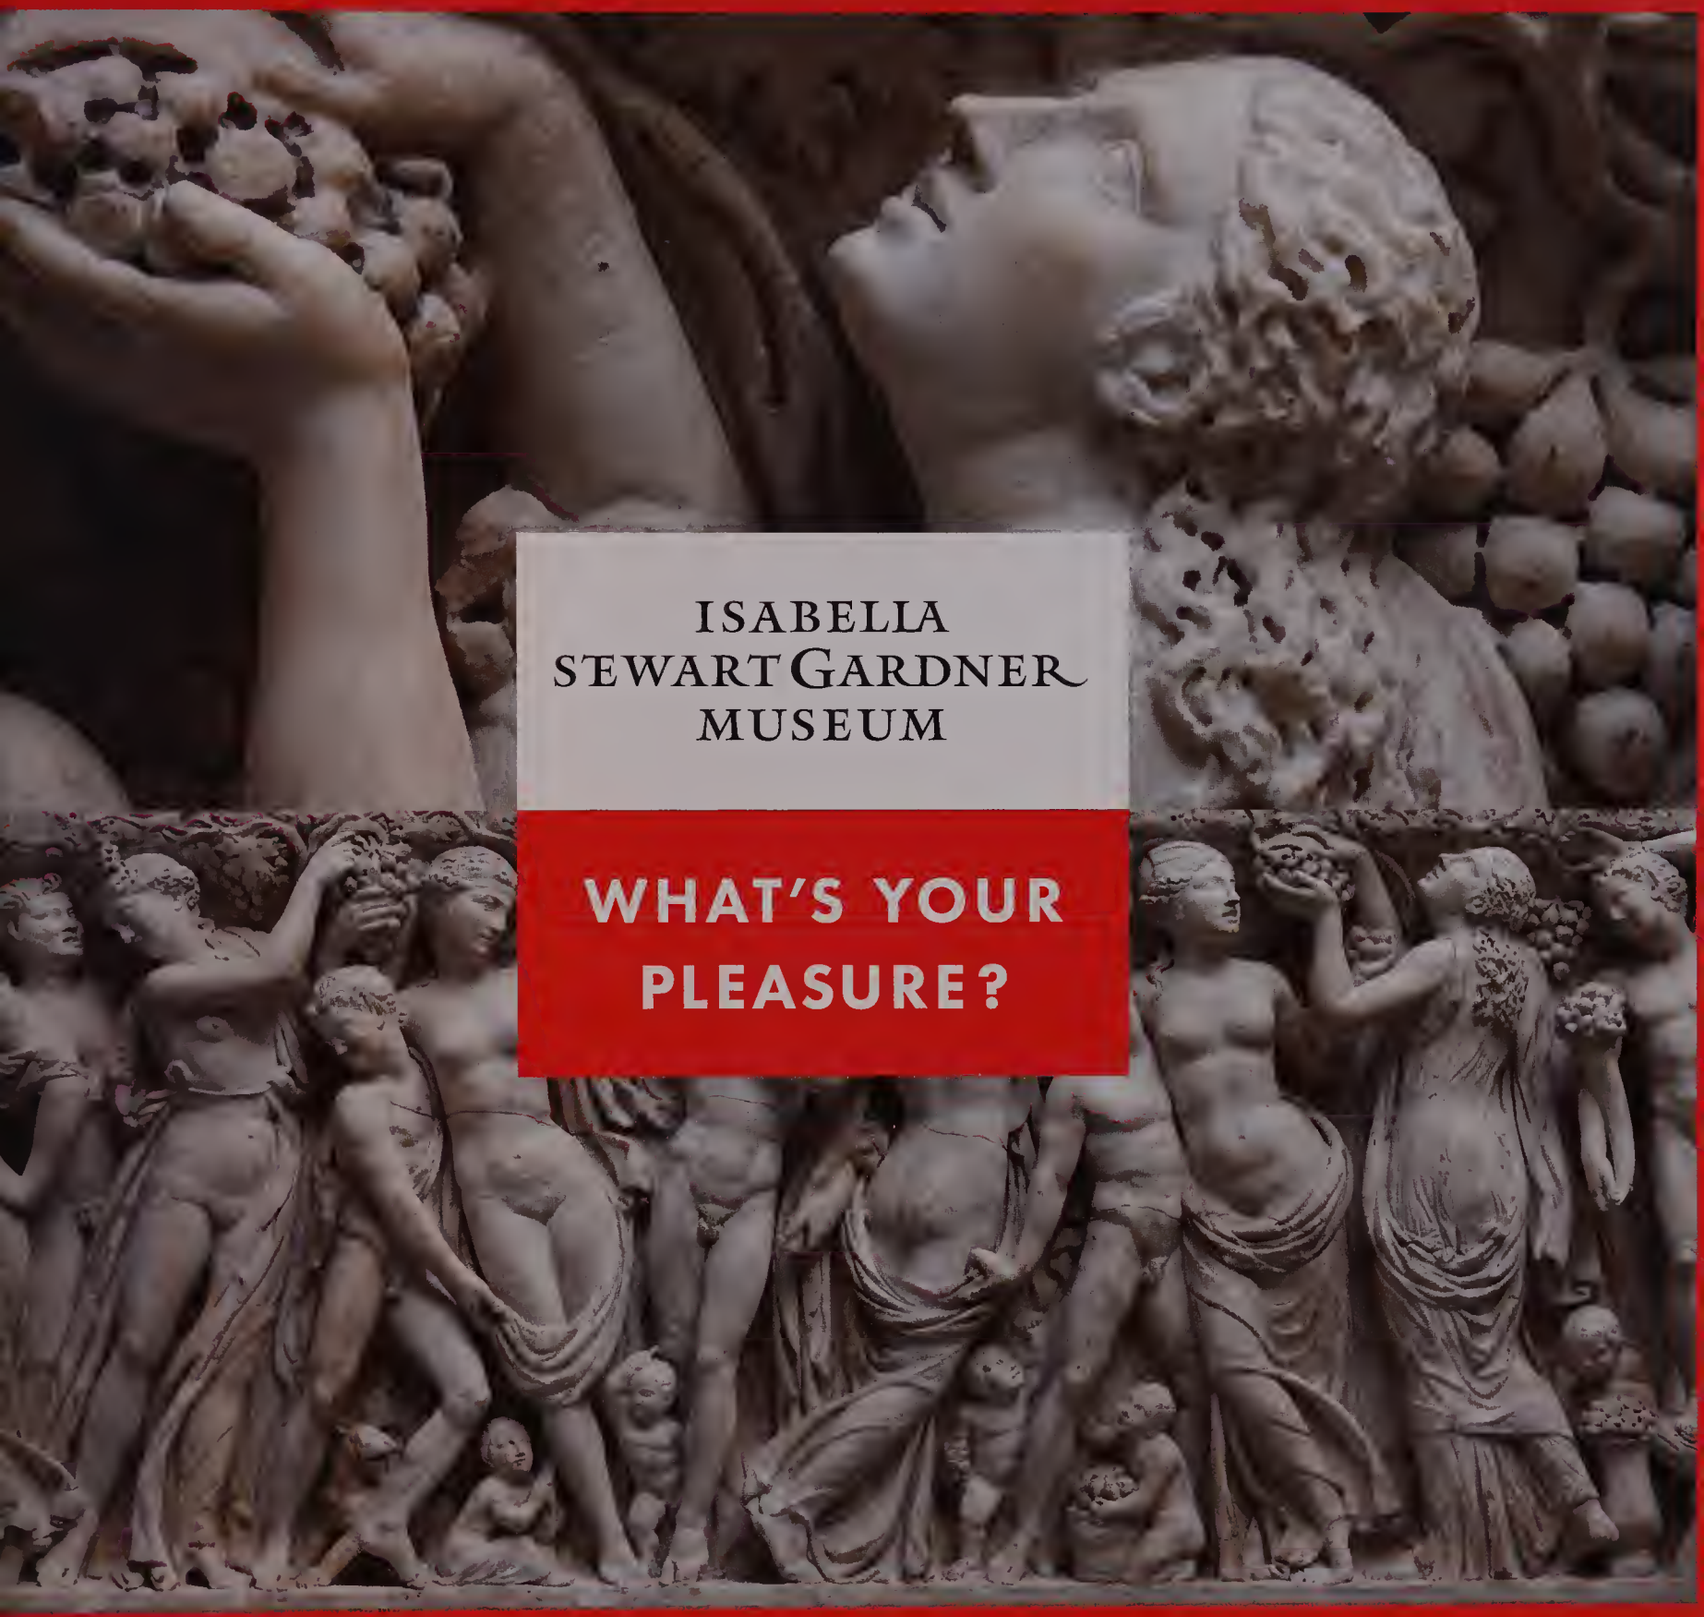
TAMBOURINE WOMAN

It's not often that you get to see a fashion show featuring a dress made from bubble wrap, Tiki umbrellas and garbage bags, and even less often that it actually looks chic. But such is the magic of the MassArt Fashion Show, which highlights the work of the school's incredibly talented students.

Spotted at the cocktail party preceding the main event: honoree Joseph Abboud, co-chairs Erin Robertson, Tali Kwatcher and Roberta Moore, architect extraordinaire Elizabeth Lowrey, charming scoundrel Alejandro Sepulveda and his partner in crime, Pamela Vargas, blond bombshell Kristina Lyons, latter-day Louise Brooks Karen Keane, arts patron Anne Fitzpatrick, fashion plate Madeleine Capino, threads peddler Marina Kalb, the alarmingly charming David Webster, the unfairly handsome Jonathan Gillis and Drew Karedes, several women who were channeling Cher or Barbra Streisand in the 1960s and one who was told she looked very "Stevie Nicks," to which she replied, "I have the attitude. I just need the tambourine."

The evening's best remark came from the man who said, "All good starter marriages start in New Orleans." ◆

IN MEMORIAM...



It's impossible to imagine a corner of the world—from stately homes to homeless shelters and corridors of power to slums—where tears weren't shed at the news of Mary Kakas' passing.

A powerhouse among Boston philanthropists, her reach was literally global. By turns a coquette, a brassy dame, the salt of the earth and a fur-swaddled socialite, a no-nonsense activist and a comedienne with impeccable delivery and timing, she loved nothing more than to laugh. For many years, she was the indomitable doyenne of Kakas Furs on Newbury Street, the oldest family-owned furrier in America, but it's as a fundraiser and a social conscience that she'll be remembered. With her perfectly coiffed, shoulder-length blond hair, color-coordinated lipstick and nail polish, dressed with military precision, she cut a huge swath through Boston's social scene, raising untold sums for countless worthy causes, brave enough to be a pain in the ass as long as the job got done.

Rest in peace, Mary. You were a true original—a swan who was never afraid to act like a silly goose, you left this world immeasurably better than you found it. No doubt, St. Peter was wrapped around your little finger at the Pearly Gates, and I'm sure you'll keep all the angels in stitches.
